Bank Bill Fight Expected to End In Glass Victory

Administration Appears Reconciled to Revised Senate Measure.

Virginian Yields, Wins Some Points

Full Committee Gives Approval to Changes by Sub-Committee.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

As the Senate Banking and Currency Committee without a dissenting voice yesterday voted approval of the Glass sub-committee draft of the Eccles banking bill, the Administration appeared to have become reconciled to the revised and less drastic measure.

Late in the day, Chairman Duncan U. Fletcher of the Banking and Currency Committee reported the revised bill to the Senate and Democratic Floor Leader Joe Robinson gave notice that he would move for action on the measure next week.

Despite the refusal of the Glass sub-committee, subsequently supported by the full Banking and Currency Committee, to include in the measure several important proposals made by Gov. Marriner S. Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board and the restrictions thrown around other provisions projected by Gov. Eccles, it appeared the bill would go through the Senate without serious fighting.

Eccles Wants Changes.

The fight over the bill, if any, will take place in the conference between House and Senate when an effort is made to reconcile the divergent measures adopted by each. Gov. Eccles is understood to be desirous of having several changes made in the bill, even though he is willing to accept the Glass-drafted measure as being an improvement over existing law.

Even though the Senate adopts the Glass draft of the measure without substantial change, Gov. Eccles is almost certain finally to get a bill more to his liking, since there will have to be a give-and-take between House and Senate in putting the measure into final form. At all events it appears that Gov. Eccles, not completely satisfied with the measure as it stands, is counting on that development, rather than risk losing an open fight in the Senate.

Victory for Glass.

The change in the Administration attitude came after the Senate Banking and Currency Committee refused to act on three out of four suggestions made by Gov. Eccles in a memorandum. The committee appeared anxious to move the bill along and took the attitude that it should not be thrown open for amendments.

So far, the course of the banking bill in the Senate represents an overwhelming victory for Senator Carter Glass (Democrat), of Virginia, a dogged warrior against many New Deal fiscal and monetary policies. The ease with which the Virginian in the last few days has dominated the situation has caused general surprise and speculation among those who remember how his advice was cast aside on previous occasions. The change has a significance beyond the bill under consideration.

One reason for the reemergence of Senator Glass' leadership is that he made some concessions to the Eccles school of thought. Although far short of what Gov. Eccles originally wanted, the bank bill gives the Reserve Board more authority over credit and monetary policies than it now possesses. Under the bill the board would be in a position to do much that it can not do now. Senator Glass' price for that, however, was to remove the board further from control of the Administration in power.

Another factor which undoubtedly contributed to Senator Glass' victory is that Congress is not as quick to accept Administration proposals without question as it was a few months ago. In other words, Congress seems to be following the leadership within its own ranks rather than that of Administration officials. Still another reason for the Glass victory is that in recent months the Virginian's

REV. ARTHUR A. O'LEARY, S. J.

O'Leary Heads Georgetown U.; Nevils to N. Y.

New President, D.C. Native, Has Served University for 23 Years.

The Rev. Arthur A. O'Leary, S. J., is the new president of Georgetown University, the first native of Washington to hold the office in the 146 years of the school's history.

The Rev. Dr. Coleman Nevils, S. J., who served as president of Georgetown for seven years, now goes to New York City, where he has been assigned to the Church of St. Ignatius Loyola on Park avenue and the two schools associated with it—Loyola Preparatory School and Regis High School.

Dr. Nevils, who served a year beyond the customary six-year term on the Hilltop, announced the appointment of Father O'Leary as his successor yesterday. The Washington priest and scholar had been designated to the post earlier in the day by the Jesuit provincial headquarters in New York.

Unaware of New Post.

Dr. Nevils left here in the afternoon, intending to spend the night at his home in Philadelphia before going on to New York. He was not aware of his new duties when he left.

Father O'Leary, a 6-footer who has spent 23 of his 48 years at Georgetown University teaching philosophy, is well fitted for his new post, having served as acting president last year while Dr. Nevils was on a trip around the world.

Before the fall term, Father O'Leary must appoint a new dean of the school of medicine to succeed Dr. William Gerry Morgan, who resigned last week. He also must name a successor to Dr. William F. Notz, who was dean of the School of Foreign Service until his death recently.

In his first announcement as president, Father O'Leary pointed to the need of building up at Georgetown of a strong national alumni association. He indicated that steps would be taken soon to establish a national alumni office in this city. From here would be directed the work of organizing alumni in all large cities.

Former Hilltop men already are well organized in such cities as

In Red Again Nation Owes 28.7 Billions

Deficit $3,575,000,000 for '35 Despite Gain in All Revenue.

Officials Admit Clear Recovery Is Only Hope Now.

By the Associated Press.

Another bulky annual deficit—$3,575,000,000 this time—was revealed yesterday, evoking official assertions that only through sustained business recovery can the scales of governmental finance be made to sag on the "revenue" side. With complete figures for the fiscal year which ended Saturday showing a national debt risen to $28,700,000,000 Treasury spokesmen otherwise saw but two available methods for reducing that total and these somewhat removed in point of time.

Eventually, it was said, the Treasury plans to apply all of its gold profits—more than $2,800,000,000—to reducing the public debt and is counting, too, on cashing in some $3,500,000,000 in assets which now back recovery loans of many types.

Slump Cost 14.6 Billions.

The figures published yesterday at the Treasury showed a cumulative deficit of $14,663,000,000 for five lean depression years, of which $9,246,000,000 has been rolled up in President Roosevelt's term in office. Since he was inaugurated the Government has collected $8,097,000,000 and has spent $17,343,000,000.

The half-decade, too, saw the national debt rise from its lowest post-war point to its highest level in history. It jumped upward by $12,674,000,000 from its level of $16,026,000,000 in December, 1930, to the $28,700,000,000 reported yesterday.

Officials noted from yesterday's figures the fact that revenues were some $885,000,000 greater than a year ago and topped the last budget estimates, made six months ago, by more than $88,000,000.

Revenue Near '29 Level.

Total receipts were $3,800,000,000 with big gains in virtually all categories of revenue. The total, officials noted, was not far short of revenues collected in such palmy years as 1928 and 1929, when the Treasury's income aggregated $4,042,000,000 and $4,033,000,000.

Expenditures, however, were even greater than in the fiscal year preceding. They totaled $7,375,000,000 as compared with $7,104,000,000. However, they ran far below the sum which President Roosevelt estimated would be spent.

He had figured on an outgo of $8,581,000,000, or $1,206,000,000 more than was actually expended. Of the sum disbursed in the year just closed, $3,721,000,000 went for what the Treasury defines as general purposes, the cost of maintaining the Government departments, as compared with $3,100,000,000 a year ago. The total for "emergency" purposes was $3,654,000,000 as compared with $4,004,000,000 in the previous twelve-month period.

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 2.—Miss Mary Hanna, granddaughter of Mark Hanna, late Cleveland capitalist and political leader, obtained a license today to marry Eberhard A. Block, a native of Germany. They will be married tomorrow at St. Patrick's Cathedral.

Miss Hanna, who is 22, is the daughter of the late Daniel Hanna, publisher of the Cleveland News, and Mrs. Stuart Hanna, of Cleveland. She was born in Cleveland, educated at the Spence School here, and has spent two years traveling in Europe.

Block is 30 and the son of Dr. Ernest Block, a Berlin physician. He was educated in Germany.

Man Charters Plane to Leap 600 Feet to Death in Atlantic

By the Associated Press.

Jacksonville Beach, Fla., July 2.—A man tentatively identified by papers in his pocket as Leroy Turner, of Greenwood, S. C., plunged 600 feet to his death in the Atlantic Ocean from an airplane near here today.

Pilot Herschell Clark said that as he turned the ship suddenly upward in an attempt to keep his passenger in the plane, Turner rolled over the fuselage, off the tail group, and plunged headlong into 8 feet of water about 200 yards from shore.

A robust man of about 28, he was dressed in white linen trousers and a blue shirt, which the impact ripped to shreds. In his pockets life guards found a pocketbook containing an identification card. There was no money.

From downtown Jacksonville he took a taxicab shortly before 5 p. m., telling the driver that he wanted to go to the airport to "take an airplane ride."

He chartered a ship and ordered the pilot to take him to the beach. Clark said it was not until he started to return to Jacksonville, a distance of about 18 miles, that he noticed anything queer about his passenger's conduct.

He said Turner's left belt fell to the floor of the cockpit. The passenger stood up in the plane, he said, apparently preparing to leap over the side.

Clark said he went into a vertical bank, believing the man would be thrown back into his seat. Instead he tumbled backward, over the pilot, and into the tail group. Clark said the ship was thrown out of control and it was several seconds before he was able to right it.

Food Prices Decline .8% Here in 2 Weeks

A six-tenths of 1 per cent decline in food prices over the country at large was announced yesterday by Dr. Isador Lubin, Commissioner of Labor Statistics. The drop is for the two-week period ended June 18.

Washington, one of the 51 cities covered in the survey, showed an average price reduction of eight-tenths of 1 per cent. Altogether, 39 cities reported decreases, 3 no change and 9 slight increases.

"The current index, 123, registers a decrease of 1.7 per cent below the year's high of April 23," Dr. Lubin said. "It is 12.8 per cent higher than one year ago, and 27.2 per cent higher than on June 15, 1933, when the index was 96.7."

Meat prices, which have been rising steadily, fell one-half of 1 per cent during the two-week period. Cabbage and onions took the greatest drops. Sliced bacon was foremost among the 12 commodities which went up.

Three Facing Life in Killing Of Dickinson

Man and Two Girls Will Be Arraigned at Detroit Today.

By the United Press.

Detroit, July 2.—William Schweitzer, 28, and two of the three women who planned and executed the robbery and murder of Howard Carter Dickinson, will be arraigned in recorder's court tomorrow on first degree murder charges, Prosecutor Duncan C. McCrea said today.

Warrants against the confessed killer and the Jackson sisters, Loretta and Florence, will be sought and the three brought to court immediately.

Jean Miller, fourth of the confessed participants in the slaying, probably will be used as a witness against her companions, McCrea indicated. She has contended that she agreed to participate in the robbery of the 52-year-old nephew by marriage of Justice Charles Evans Hughes, but has maintained she was unaware of the plot to murder him.

Face Life in Prison.

Schweitzer and the sisters, who "lured" Dickinson from his hotel room last Wednesday night to Rouge Park where he was slain, face life imprisonment as the maximum penalty that Michigan can exact for the crime of murder.

The Miller girl, whose breakdown late yesterday paved the way for Schweitzer's confession, could still face trial on robbery charges, if she appears as a witness against her companions.

It appeared possible that Schweitzer might plead guilty when he is brought before Judge Thomas W. Cutter some time before noon. The plea of the Jackson sisters was uncertain. Both have said they were "very bitter" against Schweitzer.

Police tonight were checking up to find out whether Schweitzer had previously used the women around night clubs, hotels and drinking spots to lure prosperous-appearing men out where he could rob them. All deny that he did and claimed this was their first job.

The Jackson sisters told McCrea that they agreed to the killing because Schweitzer told them that if

FTC Charged With Writing Of New Codes

Action to Be Voluntary; Green Plans Drive for New Bill.

By Felix Bruner.

President Roosevelt yesterday directed the Federal Trade Commission to begin negotiations for voluntary trade practice agreements with industry to supplant the old NRA codes. The new NRA organization will have to do only with wage, hour and child labor provisions.

The new arrangement virtually deprives NRA of all code making authority and will mean its continuance only as a research and fact-finding organization. While it will have authority over labor provisions, it is not expected that many business groups will volunteer such agreements and there is no provision to compel them to do so.

Announcement of the President's instructions came as appeals for legislation to revive the NRA were being carried to the White House. Following a conference with the President, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, made public the draft of a bill which the federation hopes to have enacted.

License Interstate Trade.

The bill, which Green hopes to have introduced in Congress within a few days, would prohibit shipment in interstate commerce of any article produced in violation of terms of the bill. It provides that no one under 16 years of age shall be eligible for employment.

The act would be administered by a commission of five members representing employers and employes. The commission would be empowered to license businesses in interstate and foreign commerce. It would have the power to revoke licenses and to appoint trustees to operate businesses the licenses of which had been revoked. The bill requires employers to bargain collectively with employes and it prohibits unfair trade practices.

Green, who was accompanied to the White House by George Berry, assistant NRA administrator, said that no definite conclusions had been reached in discussion of NRA legislation with the President. He said the question of whether NRA legislation should be pushed at this session or next was discussed. Green said he doubted legislation would be enacted before adjournment of Congress.

Something to Shoot At.

"Introduction of a bill, however," he said, "will give Congress and the people an opportunity to study it and it will give us something to shoot at."

Green said he had the impression President Roosevelt feels there should be a permanent NRA.

In addition to the NRA legislation advanced by labor, the President is studying a proposal made by the Business Advisory Council of the Commerce Department for a bill giving the Federal Trade Commission a large part in future code making. It also would provide for an enlarged commission.

Announcement that the commission would go ahead with consideration of voluntary agreements followed a conference at the White House attended by James L. O'Neill, acting NRA administrator; Attorney General Cummings, Assistant Attorney General Stevens and members of the commission. The White House discussion fol-

Quesenberry Draws 20 Years After Changing Plea to Guilty

By Frederic B. Tuttle,
A Staff Correspondent.

Courthouse, Leesburg, Va., July 2.—Old Tom Quesenberry, one-eyed moonshiner and gunman of the Virginia mountains, today avoided the violent death he has meted out to others.

Faced with the possibility the electric chair for the mc ght slaying of Clarence McClary, Alexandria policeman, near Goose Creek last March 17 during one of the most sensational manhunts in modern Virginia history, the 56-year-old mountaineer pleaded guilty to first degree murder.

Circuit Judge J. R. H. Alexander immediately sentenced the lanky prisoner to 20 years in the Virginia State Penitentiary in Richmond. This virtually amounts to life imprisonment for the man whose law was the gun.

No sooner had Quesenberry seated himself in a chair between his attorneys, Stilson H. Hall and Lucas D. Phillipps, after hearing sentence pronounced, than a shrill cry came to him out of the crowds that had watched the trial.

Elbowing her way through stragglers leaving the courtroom, came Mrs. Clarence McClary, widow of the man Quesenberry killed.

"You killed my husband," she cried, her voice trembling as she pointed a finger at the mountaineer.

"You shot him dead. He's gone—he can't ever come back. You're going to live, but you shot him dead, just as though he had been a dog. You killed him, and left me with four children to support.

"If I had a gun I'd shoot you here. I'd shoot you down now. Oh, I'd kill all of you!"

With a sweeping gesture she indicated Quesenberry's attorneys. By this time few persons were left in the courtroom.

Old Tom's right hand, the hand that had held the gun with which he took steady aim at McClary in the moonlight that night of March 17, shook nervously.

"I'm right sorry I shot Mr. McClary," said old Tom in a shaky voice.

"But I never shot anybody I didn't have to shoot. No, siree—never. If they hadn't come a-shooting

Yates' Championship Not at Stake as Capitol Police Halt Bout With Allen; Jabs Both Verbal and Real.

By Bill McCormick,
The Post's Boxing Expert.

Ringside, The Capitol, July 2.—Paul Yates, the Perilous Puncher of the Palmlands, and Robert S. Allen, the veteran Washington Walloper, fought two fast rounds to no decision here today in the third major fistic engagement of the year which has seen Max Baer punched from under his heavyweight crown and Joe Louis enthroned as the leading contender.

Because of police intervention which halted the contest scheduled to a finish, Yates' title as paperweight champion of the Virgin Islands was not at stake. For the same reason, Allen's laurels as ruler of the catch-as-catch-can class at The Capitol were not in jeopardy.

The brief, but gruelling encounter was witnessed by many of the notables always found clustered about the ringside at important prizefights. Mrs. Harold L. Ickes, wife of the Secretary of the Interior, was an interested spectator. Dr. Ernest Gruening, Chief of the Division of Island and Territories, occupied a ringside seat, as did Senator Tydings, of Maryland, and Paul M. Pearson, Governor of the Virgin Islands, who also acted as purseholder. The consensus of the ringsiders was that the bout was a draw.

The contestants appeared trained to the proverbial pink for the important engagement. Yates was the first to enter the fighting pit, which was expeditiously located in a corridor of the Senate Office Building just outside the Caucus Room where they both were to testify before a committee investigating the Administration of Gov. Pearson in the Virgin Islands.

The former administrative assistant to Pearson who filed charges of maladministration against his superior smiled confidently, but with a well-trained fighter's tenseness as he acknowledged the mingled cheers and boos of the spectators with the customary hand-shake-above-the-head.

Allen scowled viciously as he entered the scene of action from an elevator. The Titian Topped Terror, who also is a newspaperman, swung down the corridor with all the easy grace and self-assurance of the experienced pugilist. As he approached the Virgin Island Terror, Tydings' Cloture Irritates Secretary; Ousted Aids Accuse Pearson.

Mild testimony before spectators who jammed the Senate caucus room yesterday opened the Senate investigation into the administration of the Virgin Islands by Gov. Paul M. Pearson.

The first witness was Charles H. Gibson, former Virgin Islands district attorney, who was ousted by Pearson "for the good of the service."

Heavy-set, incisive and bespectacled, Gibson has been termed the "brains of the opposition" against Pearson.

He made only two specific charges against the Governor—lack of frankness in official dealings and refusal to provide Gibson with secretarial assistance, which the witness said evidenced the Governor's policy of "petty persecution."

Gibson acknowledged under questioning that he maintained a private law practice while acting as Government attorney under Pearson.

He ended his testimony for the day with a charge that the island administration was "lax" in permitting a widow there to suffer

Wellesley Graduate Vanishes From Liner on Her Way Home

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 2.—Miss Angie Eames, of Wellesley, Mass., daughter of the late Francis Eames, of Philadelphia, was lost at sea from the Italian liner Conte Grande under unexplained circumstances, ship's officers reported when the liner docked in New York today.

Miss Eames, 40, a Wellesley College graduate, was returning to the United States after four years of teaching English in private Italian schools.

Capt. Angelo C. Capurro was notified of her disappearance June 27, when her stateroom was discovered to have been unoccupied during the night. The Italian line set the time of the disappearance only some time during the night of June 26-27. She boarded the liner at Gibraltar June 24.

Her cousin, Burton Eames, of Boston, who met the ship, said Miss Eames had been quite happy and with no apparent reason for suicide.

A fellow passenger, however, Otilda Ringdahl, of St. Paul, Minn., said she noticed Miss Eames on the tender going out to the ship at Gibraltar and said she appeared to be nervous. That night, Miss Ringdahl said, they passed while strolling on the deck of the Conte Grande and Miss Eames said:

"You appear to be following me, or I you."

Miss Eames was seen once playing solitaire in one of the ship's public rooms and at lunch June 25. There was no account of anyone having seen her again. The ship's doctor reported she had not seemed despondent and had appeared quite sociable.

Capt. Capurro ordered a search of the ship without result. No notes or indicative correspondence were found in her stateroom, and her possessions were said to have been in perfect order.

"I don't know whether it was an accident or sudden impulse," said Eames, her cousin.

Senate Step for Probe of 'Undue Influence' Also Is Taken.

By Robert C. Albright.

Searching investigation of lobbying activities for and against the Administration on pending power legislation was ordered by the House in a tumultous session yesterday immediately after passage of the Wheeler-Rayburn utilities bill—minus the holding company "death sentence."

The inquiry was provoked by serious charges made on the House floor against Thomas Corcoran, RFC attorney and one of the authors of the Wheeler-Rayburn bill.

Representative Ralph O. Brewster (Republican), Maine, a former Governor of his State, said Corcoran threatened to stop construction on the Passamaquoddy dam in Maine if Brewster voted against the "death sentence."

In the fury of partisan debate that followed, Representative Hamilton Fish, jr. (Republican), New York, offered a resolution calling for investigation into the charges.

Substitute Passed.

A substitute by Representative Samuel B. Pettengill (Democrat), Indiana, was adopted instead. This expanded the scope of the inquiry and designated the House Rules Committee to make the investigation. Chairman John J. O'Connor said he will call his committee together Monday for that purpose.

A resolution even more sweeping was offered at the same time in the Senate by Senator Hugo Black (Democrat), Alabama. This asked $150,000 and subpena power to conduct "a full and complete investigation of the lobbying activities in connection with the so-called 'holding company bill.'" It was referred to the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee.

The inquisitorial action followed a week of charges and counter charges of "lobbying" hurled first at utility holding company interests and then at the Administration. Both were accused of bringing unusual pressure to bear on members of Congress.

The climax came yesterday with blunt House refusal to approve the holding company "death sentence" provision of the Senate bill, despite a clear-cut request from the President that the change be made.

Second Teller Vote.

Following up the previous day's crushing defeat of the dissolution proviso, the House in another teller vote and a record roll call ballot, reiterated its refusal to enact the Senate section.

Then it passed the modified House bill, devoid of the "death sentence," by a vote of 323 to 81. The measure now goes to the Senate, where Senator William H. Dieterich (Democrat), of Illinois, on Monday will move to concur in the House action.

Acting to offset this maneuver, Senator Burton K. Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, will attempt to send the bill to conference. He favors killing the bill altogether if the "death sentence" is eliminated. Wheeler conferred yesterday with the President and afterward expressed hope that acceptable legislation can be worked out in conference.

Twice again yesterday the House bolted the Administration on the dissolution amendment and other provisions of the Senate bill. Another teller vote test demanded by Representative Vito Marcantonio (Republican), of New York, brought a 246 to 133 rejection.

Later a roll call attempt to substitute the Senate bill failed by an even broader margin—258 to 147. Ninety-two House Republicans joined 166 Democrats in support of the milder House measure, while 130 Democrats, 7 Republicans, 7

$160,000,000 Allotted for Housing; $113,000,000 for Reclamation.

Differences over the question of how much of the $4,000,000,000 works program is to be handled by the Works Progress Administration, headed by Harry L. Hopkins, and how much is to be handled by the PWA, headed by Secretary Ickes, have been settled, Ickes announced yesterday.

These differences, which arose at the beginning of the program and which have been growing as Hopkins was given more and more power, have had much to do with slowing up the program. Although there have been repeated protestations that there were no misunderstandings among those handling the expenditure of the new relief fund, it is known that there have been repeated discussions over the division of duties and that the problem has been carried to the White House.

Ickes said there would be a "clarification" of the question within a day or two, indicating that a statement will be issued, presumably from the White House.

"There is going to be a clarification in a day or two of just what a Public Works project is," Ickes said. "It will distinguish between public works projects and works progress projects."

The PWA administrator said the "clarification" would not involve a change in the PWA policy of making 45 per cent grants from works funds.

"There has been a good deal of confusion," he said, "as to what is PWA and what is WPA."

Ickes said the conclusions were reached by agreement and that the President passed on them. He said he did not ask for the clarification. He added that the PWA probably would do more business as a result of the statement.

Asked whether the PWA would have a very large part in the works program, Ickes replied that "it will have a very important part."

Settlement of the differences apparently came before the allotment board announcement on Monday of the first lump sum allocations to States to be administered under Hopkins' direction. These allocations, which may eventually total as much as $2,000,000,000, will continue to be made as rapidly as State programs are completed. They will all provide for projects with low material costs.

At the PWA housing division it was announced that President Roosevelt had allotted $160,000,000 for low cost housing projects. This allotment is from the $249,000,000 recently earmarked for the purpose.

The program will include 50 projects. Ickes declined to indicate the location of any of them until land is acquired. The housing program has been delayed a few days pending approval by Comptroller General McCarl.

The FERA revealed figures showing almost two-thirds of the urban unemployed in the Nation are concentrated in 23 cities. It is in these cities that an effort will be made to start new projects first.

Four cities have more than 100,000 families each on the relief rolls. They are New York, 339,645 families; Chicago, 159,000; Los Angeles, 118,000; Philadelphia, 110,000. Other cities on the "most needy" list are Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Birmingham, San Francisco, Washington, Atlanta, Indianapolis, New Orleans, Baltimore, Boston, Detroit, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Newark, Buffalo, Cincinnati, Toledo, Wilkes-Barre and Milwaukee.

Meanwhile, a group of 11 Western Senators, headed by Senator Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, said after a call at the White House that they had been virtually assured of approval of a $113,000,000 reclamation program in Western States. The program has been recommended by Dr. Elwood Meade, reclamation commissioner.

The CCC, the only part of the new relief set-up which actually is under way, yesterday began laying in supplies to care for the 600,000 men who eventually will be enrolled. More than 367,000 now are at work.

The CCC ordered 11,000,000 cotton shirts, 1,995,000 pairs of mittens, 6,828,822 pairs of wool socks, 123,500 toilet kits, 353,024 brooms and 159,685 lengths of stovepipe. A total of 1,640 camps are now occupied and 1,276 are being built.

What's in Back of Utilities Bill Furor? Lobby Costs in Upkeep; Landon 1936 Buildup Begins.

By Raymond Clapper.

IF YOU don't understand this utility fight you are no worse off than almost everyone in Washington.

Why, for instance, are the utilities fighting to put their fate in the hands of SEC?

They regard it as a great victory to have the House adopt a provision which in effect says that the SEC shall dissolve holding companies except where it is deemed in the public interest not to. The hated Senate bill simply said SEC should dissolve holding companies, with some important qualifications, and said nothing about deeming it in the public interest.

But why the Senate provision is called a "death sentence" and the House version hailed as a virtual emancipation proclamation is hard to understand in view of the particular gentlemen who constitute SEC and who are to be the judges.

* * * *

SEC, to which the utilities proposed to entrust their fate, is a five-man body, composed as follows:

Joseph P. Kennedy, newly-re-elected chairman; former Wall street operator; wise in market ways; inclined to be fair; very close to Mr. Roosevelt at present and likely to lean his way.

James M. Landis, former Frankfurter protege; one of drafters of securities act; strong New Dealer.

Robert E. Healy, Vermont Republican, as counsel of Federal Trade Commission, conducted power investigation which revealed holding company abuses and furnished much of material used in support of utilities bill.

One vacancy, expected by many to go to Benjamin Cohen, one of drafters of utilities bill and strong champion of death sentence provision.

Even assuming that this vacancy goes to a friend of the utilities, the commission still would be hostile to holding companies.

Putting discretionary power over the utilities in the hands of this group is just about like giving a hungry cat discretion in carrying out a death sentence on a fat canary.

On the face of it, there is no explaining why the utilities have been pulling every wire within reach to be placed at the mercy of such a commission.

But maybe there is a hint in the report of Representative Eicher, of Iowa, member of the House interstate Commerce Committee, who led the fight to substitute the Senate death sentence for the House discretionary provision. He questions the constitutionality of the grant of discretionary power. This House provision, he says, "badly shifts congressional responsibility to the commission without any real declaration of congressional policy. * * * Enforcement of such provision truly lies within the whim of the commission and is confessedly of doubtful constitutionality." Cf. Supreme Court on Schechter and hot oil.

The Roosevelt Administration has been accused by the opposition of insisting upon legislation which is palpably unconstitutional. In this instance it may be that the positions are the other way around.

That might explain the strategy of the utilities. Still, it does not explain why the Administration has resorted to the extremes to which it has gone in applying pressure. Certainly never before, not even within the last few weeks, has the Administration shown any hesitation because of constitutional doubts. It pushed through the Wagner labor disputes bill, social security legislation and AAA amendments without even slowing down for constitutional red flag warning. It has not shown any scruples about preserving the coordinate independence of Congress in the utilities fight. Representative Brewster (Republican), of Maine, says publicly that an Administration agent, Thomas Corcoran, one of the drafters of the utilities bill, warned him that works money for Passamaquoddy Dam in Maine would be cut if he voted against the death sentence. Representative Hoeppel (Democrat), of California, says an official told him to vote with the Administration or California's works money would be cut. The White House sent its chief lobbyist, former Representative West, and Assistant Chairman of the Democratic National Committee Hurja scurrying around House corridors. The new name for it is Hurjaing.

Why all of this? The Administration has lost its sense of proportion for one thing. Second, Mr. Roosevelt has long nursed deep hostility to holding companies and refuses to let them have even an empty victory if he can prevent it. Third, it has been a political axiom that an attack on the power trust is good popular politics. Fourth, holding company abuses have been inexcusable and the disposition is to use any stick to beat a dog.

Political Parade: Red-headed young John Hamilton, Kansas national committeeman and general counsel of the Republican National Committee, is doing the torch bearing for the party so far as its national headquarters is concerned. His good friend, Former Vice President Curtis, of Kansas, is complaining because National Chairman Fletcher isn't more active. The Kansas program is Gov. Alf M. Landon for President and Hamilton for national chairman in 1936. The build-up for Landon on the basis of his economy record as Governor of Kansas is starting. And the fact that he carried Kansas twice in face of Roosevelt landslides won't hurt him. . . . Gov. Talmadge of Georgia is expected to make his own declaration of independence July 4, opposing Roosevelt for the presidential nomination. . . . The House voted down an amendment to the utilities bill proposing to prohibit utility corporations from making campaign contributions. But it won't do any good. Corporations are forbidden to contribute anyway, so the utilities officers will have to dig down in their own pockets as usual and get it by in the expense account some way. . . . Some of those House votes yesterday will cost money before the next campaign is over. And they're going to cost the administration works fund money, too. When you start lobbying, it isn't the initial cost that is expensive, it's the upkeep.

Republicans are forcing the Administration into a tight spot on taxes by demanding that revenue legislation pay some attention to raising revenue. Administration proposals do not come below the millionaire income line and thus fail to reach the largest blocks of medium incomes, where revenue-raising possibilities lie. Republicans are attempting to show that the Administration is not interested in trying to balance income and expenses and that it is running away from any general tax increase on the eve of an election.

Bill to Curb Smugglers' Watch Racket Advanced

By the Associated Press.

Drastic steps to break up the watch-smuggling racket were approved yesterday by the powerful House Ways and Means Committee.

It submitted for house action the McCormack bill providing for destruction instead of auction sales of hundreds of thousands of smuggled watches seized annually.

As described by Rerpresentative McCormack (Democrat), Massachusetts, the racket is to order lots of non-duty paid watch movements, tip off customs officials and buy the seized goods at less than the duty.

Senate Backs Pact To Save Art in War

The Senate yesterday ratified a treaty signed April 15 by the 21 American republics looking toward the protection of libraries, art galleries, cathedrals and other artistic or scientific institutions or historic monuments in time of war.

The treaty embodies the "Roerich Pact" initiated by the Roerich Museum of the United States providing for the universal adoption of a flag to preserve all nationally and privately owned immovable monuments in time of danger.

House to Probe Lobby Struggle On Holding Bill

This left Section 11 of the House bill standing unamended, transferring to the Securities and Exchange Commission power to force liquidation of utility holding companies where necessary in the public interest.

House Republicans vainly attempted to strike out even this delegation of power, but their motion to recommit the bill was defeated 312 to 93 on a roll call. Representative John E. Rankin futilely maneuvered to make this another test on the "death sentence," but the Chair failed to recognize him.

Former Gov. Brewster's charge of undue influence to change his vote was the second such allegation made in a day of House bedlam. A Democrat—Representative John H. Hoeppel, of California, made the first.

"I was told by a source, which I will not disclose, that relief funds for California may be more liberal in the event I support the President in his 'righteous stand,'" declared Hoeppel.

Resolution for Probe.

The Pettengill resolution for a two-way inquiry into power "lobbying" charges was finally adopted by a voice vote. It read:

"Whereas, the gentleman from Maine, Mr. Brewster, has just informed the House that one Thomas Corcoran, not a member of the House, improperly approached him and attempted to unduly influence him as to his vote on the utility act of 1935, be it

"Resolved, That the Rules Committee of the House be and it is hereby authorized and directed to investigate such charges and all charges of the exercise of undue influence on members of the House by both the proponents and opponents of S. 2796 and report its findings to the House with its recommendations."

Earlier, Representative Fish had mentioned activities in behalf of the bill by both Corcoran and Benjamin Cohen, another Government attorney and with Corcoran a junior member of the New Deal's so-called "brain trust."

Immediately after the Pettengill resolution, Representative Edward C. Moran, jr., Democratic member of the Maine delegation, rushed to the floor with a defense of the two men. He said he talked to both after Brewster preferred his charges.

Defends Corcoran.

Moran related how Brewster, the only lawyer in the Maine delegation, had handled certain legal aspects of the Passamaquoddy project at the request of Corcoran, who was said to be the President's personal representative in clearing up details of the Maine tide-harnessing project. Brewster not only sat in with Corcoran on Passamaquoddy conferences, but on congressional conferences over the utilities holding company bill.

"I can see the difficulty in mixing the propositions up," declared Moran. "In other words, we have been working on the utility bill and the 'quoddy' at one and the same time, and the conversation at some meetings would shift with rapidity and naturalness from one subject to the other and cooperation had been complete."

"As far as Mr. Corcoran is concerned," Moran asserted, "Mr. Corcoran told me that all he said to the gentleman from the Third District (Brewster) was that if he felt as he said he felt, unable to continue his support for the death sentence for the utility, then he should not with correctness to the Administration be trusted with the 'Quoddy' developments."

Seeks to Interrupt.

Maine's former Governor attempted to interrupt the speaker, but Moran declined to yield.

Brewster was assailed by Representative Maury Maverick (Democrat), Texas, for voting against the "death sentence" after, Maverick said, he had led him to believe he was for it.

Maverick's assertion that he would not "believe a word that he said" after that brought from Brewster an immediate demand that Maverick's words be "taken down." Brewster demanded recognition on a question of "highest personal privilege."

Speaker Byrns ruled that a question of privilege was not involved.

When the Fish demand for an investigation was first presented, Representative Tom Blanton (Democrat), Texas, raised a point of order against it. The Speaker overruled it.

"We are supposed to be strong enough to withstand any such approaches from irresponsible officials of the Government," declared Blanton. "If this had been a Cabinet officer or someone connected with the President's office, the situation might be different."

Brewster, making his charge, said:

"During the consideration of the 'death sentence' clause in the holding company bill, Thomas G. Corcoran, Esq., co-author with Benjamin V. Cohen, Esq., of the bill, came to me in the lobby of the Capitol, and stated to me, with * * * what he termed 'brutal frankness,' that if I should vote against the 'death sentence' for public utility holding companies he would find it necessary to stop construction on the Passamaquoddy Dam in my district."

Both Corcoran and Cohen declined comment following the incident. Corcoran said he would reserve any statement until the rules committee opens its investigation.

That investigation, Representative O'Connor told the House, to the accompaniment of wild cheers and applause, will be conducted without favors to anyone concerned. The hastily drawn motion failed to provide any appropriation or even the power of subjena. O'Connor said he would return to the House for added authority if it is needed.

Informed of the episode, Secretary of the Interior Ickes commented: "That doesn't sound like Corcoran." Ickes said the $10,000,000 allocation for Passamaquoddy already has been made and the project is going forward.

In two important respects, the Senate utility holding company bill rejected yesterday by the House differs from the milder House version.

First, the Senate measure would abolish any holding company more than one degree removed from an operating utility. All others not "geographically or economically" integrated would be virtually eliminated by 1940. The House bill delegates the power of dissolution to the Securities and Exchange Commission, where it finds this necessary in the public interest.

Second, the Senate bill definitely would prohibit contracts between holding companies and their operating subsidiaries, covering service, sales and construction. The House bill leaves this also to the Securities and Exchange Commission, which it gives regulatory control over the interstate transmission of electrical energy, wholesale for resale.

Unless the Senate concurs in the House changes, the two bills will go to conference, where attempts will be made to iron out differences. This would give the Administration another opportunity for revival of the so-called "death sentence." Such a change in conference, however, would encounter predominantly powerful House opposition when it returned for approval.

G. O. P. Presses Session in Fall To Revise Taxes

Hastings Leads Drive While New Dealers Demand Action Now.

By the Associated Press.

Senate Republicans rallied yesterday behind a move for general revenue revision at a special session of Congress in the fall instead of enactment of President Roosevelt's limited tax recommendations.

While the Republicans sparred for time in an effort to consolidate public sentiment back of their plan, Administration leaders pushed on for action immediately.

Chairman Harrison said the Senate Finance Committee probably would open hearings on the tax program simultaneously with the House Ways and Means Committee Monday. He has predicted the revenue bill could be passed by August 1.

Hastings Leads Drive.

Spearhead of the Republican drive in the Senate was one of the New Deal's most consistent critics, Senator Hastings, of Delaware. He had the support of the party leader, Senator McNary, and most of the Republican regulars.

Hastings has introduced a resolution calling for a special session November 18 to act on a revenue bill. While waiting for an opportunity to call it up, he issued a public statement demanding a revenue bill that would balance the budget.

Hastings charged that the President's recommendations were "more for the purpose of bringing about what the President calls 'a better social order' than they are to raise revenue."

"From my point of view, the country would be a lot better off if it dropped this 'better social order' stuff and got down to the serious proposition of trying to meet its obligations," he continued.

Urges Balanced Budget.

Hastings said everyone must realize that the Government can not "continue to expend two or three times as much as its income" without bringing on uncontrolled inflation.

"I think the sooner we begin to meet this situation the better off we will be," he added. "The suggestion that Congress adjourn until November 18 is not for the purpose of delay, but it is for the purpose of assuring orderly procedure and a careful study of the situation."

Roosevelt Requests World Parley in U. S.

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt yesterday asked Congress for authority to invite the third world power congress to meet in the United States late next year. He asked a $75,000 appropriation for expenses.

The Chief Executive forwarded in his message a report from Secretary Hull which recalled that the conference had met first in 1924 and again in 1930. Hull said a meeting in the United States in 1936 would permit "a general exchange of views, such as is possible only through the medium of an international conference."

He added it would "be of real value to our own engineers, industrialists and public officials."

New Deal Blast From Talmadge Is Due July 4th

Georgia Governor to Open Battle on Roosevelt's Renomination.

By the Associated Press.

Atlanta, July 2.—Gov. Eugene Talmadge will take his fight against President Roosevelt to the people of Georgia at Canton, Ga., July 4.

Political observers said today they believed this is to mark the beginning of a batle that will culminate in the presidential preferential primary in Georgia next year between the Governor and Mr. Roosevelt.

In 1932 Georgia gave the President an overwhelming vote in the primary. He is a part-time resident of the State and has a home atop Pine Mountain at Warm Springs.

The Governor has spoken in the East and Mid-West against the Democratic Administration. He said it would be a "calamity" if Mr. Roosevelt is re-nominated.

Hoping to get at least 25,000 Georgians to hear his plea for State's rights and "the end of that Communistic doctrine at Washington," the Governor personally took charge of publicity for the gathering.

He selected the little town of Canton, about 50 miles north of Atlanta, a bridge dedication and Independence Day for the setting.

Three brass bands have been engaged, and because of the lack of facilities in the town to feed a large number of people those who attend have been told to bring their baskets of lunch.

Observers in political affairs are attaching importance to the number of people actually present for the speech. They contend the assemblage will indicate just how strong the people are behind the Governor in his criticism of the President.

The speech is to be delivered in a 20 acre park, named for Joe Brown, Georgia's Civil War governor.

Man Held in Alleged Threat Against Lawyer

Lyman H. Wolff, of Englewood, N. J., was arrested by headquarters detectives yesterday after allegedly threatening the life of William J. Rowan, an attorney with officers in the Woodward Building.

Wolff, police were told, went to the attorney's office and after a brief exchange of words, threatened to "cut his throat." Rowan said he never saw the man before. Wolff will be arraigned today in police court on threat charges.

lowed a series of conferences between NRA officials and commission members.

"We asked the President's permission to have the Federal Trade Commission proceed with conferences on fair trade practices without waiting for further legislation," O'Neill said. He indicated this permission had been granted.

Ewin L. Davis, chairman of the commission, said it would proceed immediately to hold fair trade practice conferences with business groups. He said agreements would be reached by negotiation rather than through formal hearings and that after a code is agreed upon it will be submitted to each member of the industry affected.

"Of course there is no way of forcing an industrial unit to approve an agreement," he said.

He said that some enforcement might be obtained through the use of labels, with power to present their misuse.

The action of the President in turning trade agreements over to the Federal Trade Commission returns Government regulation to the position existing before enactment of NRA and the introduction of the Blue Eagle. Federal Trade Commission agreements have been in existence for years, but in the last two years they have been overshadowed by NRA codes.

Trial for Contempt Invited by Woman

Mrs. Hammond Requests Sen. George to Act.

On mourning stationery bearing the declaration, "The Right to Petition Is Dying," Mrs. Hilda Phelps Hammond, chairman of the women's committee of Louisiana, yesterday wrote to Senator George (Democrat), of Georgia, urging him to have her tried for contempt of the Senate.

The committee recently filed a petition containing charges against Senators Long and Overton, of Louisiana. Senator George, chairman of the committee that investigated the Overton election, ruled that the petition would not be received because it was "scurrilous."

"The question has nothing to do with the so-called scurrility," said the black-bordered letter. "The one question is—are the charges made by us true?"

Costigan Sees Public Demand For New Rights

Constitution Faes Test on Eonomic Justice, He Tells Teachers.

By the Associated Press.

Denver, July 2.—The Nation's teachers heard from Senator Edward P. Costigan, of Colorado, tonight a warning that a "constitutional crisis may be approaching in America," resulting in the setting up by the people of an "economic bill of rights."

As Costigan addressed the National Education Association, behind the scenes stirred an intricate issue—academic freedom. A group of Columbia professors raised it. Three candidates for the organization's presidency shunted aside the question temporarily.

The "academic freedom" group demanded definite action "to investigate any infringement upon the rights of teachers to offer full discussion on controversial subjects and report directly to the American people."

Senator Costigan analyzed the Supreme Court decision outlawing the NRA code structure, saying:

Flexibility Declared Aim.

"It follows that if the Supreme Court adheres to such precedents, we must, soon or late, decide whether this Nation can afford to ignore resulting human tragedies, or by constitutional amendments, to secure enlarged power enabling it to legislate for proper and indispensable national objectives * * *

"The founders of the American Union were well aware that free government, like free education, must be subject to change," Costigan added: "That the ultimate governmental issue in the world is between flexible popular rule and ever-encroaching inflexible dictatorships."

Of schooling, he said:

"Certainly we ought to be able, without further argument to agree at least on such minimum Federal steps as these: Grants in aid by the Federal Government to States, where necessary, for free public educatoin designed to liberalize and equalize opportunities for teachers and students, without undermining traditions of wholesome local school control and direction."

Youth Program Criticized.

Regarding academic freedom, Dr. Alexander J. Stoddard, Providence, R. I., president of the association's department of superintendence, said: "I am perfectly willing to allow any professor to say and teach what he thinks, provided we hold him responsible for the truth of what he says."

He cautiously criticized President Roosevelt's $50,000,000 youth program, saying "Any other method of serving youth (except through educational processes) will likely be a palliative and not a cure."

Administration of the Roosevelt plan has been undertaken through the Treasury and the FERA.

Nina Gore Vidal To Ask Divorce At Reno Today

Attorney Denies Air Chief's Wife to Rewed Soon; Charges Cruelty.

By the Associated Press.

Reno, Nev., July 2.—Mrs. Nina Gore Vidal, daughter of United States Senator Thomas P. Gore, of Oklahoma, will file suit tomorrow, to divorce Eugene L. Vidal, director of the Commerce Department's Bureau of Air Commerce, her attorney, George Springmeyer, said today. The grounds, Springmeyer said, will be cruelty.

Asked to comment on reports the Washington society matron intends to marry Hugh D. Auchincloss, Washington investment banker, following her expected divorce, Springmeyer said:

"I am personally satisfied she has no intention immediately to remarry."

She has been living on a secluded 'dude' ranch, several miles from Reno, for the last six weeks.

Auchincloss visited Mrs. Vidal here last week while he was a guest at the Lake Tahoe, Nev., home of his sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Biltz, New York socialites. Springmeyer said today, however, that Auchincloss had "returned to the East."

London, July 2.—The true "first editions" of Rudyard Kipling—yellowing files of newspapers—will go on auction here tomorrow.

The lots offered for sale are 72 crimson buckram-bound volumes of issues of the Allahabad newspaper Pioneer and 208 issues of the Week's News of Allahabad in which stories like "Plain Tales From the Hills" first saw print.

"I wish we could buy them," Col. Cecil Bailey, secretary of the Kipling Society, said. "I suppose the prices fetched will run into three figures, and we are poor—one can't do much on a $2.50 annual subscription."

Literary experts and members of the Kipling Society will turn up at the sale in full force. Attendance of the society members will be an act of devotion, for the 1,832 daily issues of the Pioneer covering the period from 1885 to 1890 and the Week's News issues covering 1888-1891 show Kipling as a literary apprentice.

In all, collectors will buy nearly 200 columns of Kipling stories which, because of the author's modesty, are mostly unsigned.

It was while working on the Pioneer that Kipling wrote "Soldiers Three," "Wee Willie Winkie," "The Phantom Rickshaw" and the "City of Dreadful Night."

Many of the poems published in these two papers have never been reprinted. They did not even get into the famed Wheeler's Indian Railway Library as did the stories.

Column after column of his pioneer stories Kipling wrote when hardly out of his teens—he was born in 1865. His career as a newspaperman ended in 1890 when his writings had started selling freely.

Shows Liquor Bottle, License Is Suspended

The liquor dispensing licenses of D. G. Harsoulas, at 1003 E street northwest, was suspended for 24 hours beginning at noon yesterday when he admitted to the District Alcoholic Beverage Control Board he had displayed a bottle of liquor from which he served customers.

Harsoulas said his customers wanted to know what brand of liquor he was serving them. He said he had read of Congress enacting a measure ending the ban on open mixing of drinks and that the President intended to sign the bill. Board members believed his story, but warned him the hidden bar law still was in effect.

Victory Is Seen For Bank Bill In Its New Form

prestige has grown as he has been applauded in academic circles for his courage and independence.

ing its formal approval to the Glass sub-committee draft of the bank measure, Gov. Eccles, Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau and Undersecretary of the Treasury T. Jefferson Coolidge were conferring with the President over the bill. The nature of their conversations, lasting 45 minutes, was not revealed, but on leaving the White House Morgenthau asserted he had some suggestions to make to the Senate committee if his views were asked.

Kennedy Sees President.

A few minutes later Joseph P. Kennedy, chairman of the SEC, saw the President. Leaving the White House, he expressed satisfaction that the Senate committee had stricken from the bill an exemption from the civil liabilities of the securities act for banks engaged in underwriting securities. The bill would permit national banks to underwrite security issues under rigid restrictions and by consent of the Comptroller of the Currency.

But while elimination of the provision exempting banks from liability was pleasing to Kennedy it was not satisfactory to the Federal banking officials, who contended that they could not consent to national banks engaging in any activity in which they would incur an unlimited liability. So it would seem that the underwriting permission may not be used.

The committee made two changes in the Glass draft of the bill. One struck out a provision that the Secretary of the Treasury should recommend to the President a candidate for Comptroller of the Currency. This was regarded as of no consequence. The other change, understood to have been one proposed by Gov. Eccles, dealt with the selection of the representatives of the Reserve banks on the proposed open market committee.

Balance Assured.

Under the Glass draft, as reported to the full committee, the Reserve banks would have five representatives on this committee, selected by the 12 presidents—a new name for governors of the Reserve banks—of the 12 institutions. This was changed to assure a balance of regional representation.

The amendment adopted provided that one of the five bank representatives should be elected at large from the country by the presidents of the 12 Reserve banks and that of the other four, one should be elected by the boards of directors of the Reserve banks of Boston, New York and Philadelphia; one by the directors of the Reserve banks of Cleveland, Chicago and St. Louis; one by the directors of the banks of Richmond, Atlanta and Dallas, and one by the directors of the Reserve banks of Minneapolis, Kansas City and San Francisco.

The committee was reported to have rejected three other recommendations by Gov. Eccles. One would permit the Reserve Board to change deposit requirements on a majority vote of the board instead of five members as provided. Another would have applied the real estate loan provision to State member banks as well as national banks. The third would have made retiring members of the board eligible for pensions.

May Decrease Number.

It was also indicated by Senator James F. Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, that later on an effort may be made to decrease the number of reserve bank representatives on the open market committee from 5 to 4, in order to diminish the prospects of a deadlocked committee which might result if the 5 bank members voting as a unit should persuade one member of the bi-partisan board to join them.

Incidentally, the provision for a bi-partisan board when it is reorganized 90 days after the passage of the bill, if it stands, means that two or three members of the present board will have to be dropped. The bi-partisan provision means that not more than four members of the proposed seven-man body may be of the same political faith.

Other Members.

Gov. Eccles is the only member of the present board regarded as a Republican, although he voted for President Roosevelt in 1932. Dr. Adolph C. Miller, named by former President Woodrow Wilson to the board, reappointed since, declines to declare his party affiliation but he has been regarded as a Democrat.

The other members, who are J. J. Thomas, vice governor of the board, Charles S. Hamlin, George R. James and M. S. Szymczak, are regarded as Democrats. The board now consists of two ex-officio members, Secretary Morgenthau and J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency, both Democrats. The bill now provides for dropping these two ex-officio members.

An effort may be made to strike the bipartisan requirement from the bill, either on the Senate floor or in conference. It also is possible that an effort will be made to vote into the bill some declaration of objective for reserve board activities but in language greatly modified from that inserted by the House.

The committee added to the bill a section limiting dividends on preferred stock of national banks to 6 per cent annually and providing that in the retirement of such stock or through the liquidation of the bank not more than the purchase price, plus any accumulated dividends, shall be paid for the stock.

By the Associated Press.

The Justice Department said yesterday it had terminated anti-trust action against the Radio Corporation of America and affiliates by a supplemental consent decree entered in Federal District Court at Wilmington, Del.

The decree, it added, enjoined RCA from claiming that its agreements restrain foreign companies from setting up competing circuits or using other circuits for messages.

Official Feud Rages, Strikers Riot in Canada

Dominion and Provincial Heads at Odds Over Jurisdiction.

By the Associated Press.

Regina, Saskatchewan, July 2.—A controversy between the provincial and dominion governments over the handling of striking relief camp workers gathered here flared today in the wake of last night's riots in which 1 policeman was killed, 100 persons injured and property damage estimated at $25,000 done.

While Saskatchewan authorities were reported ready to begin dispersing the strikers tonight, T. C. Davis, provincial attorney general, sent the following telegram to Hugh Guthrie, minister of justice at Ottawa:

"I demand that I be advised forthwith as to whether you consider the enforcement of the criminal code in this province is your responsibility or ours, and I demand that you forthwith instruct the police to take orders from me and from me alone in connection with the enforcement of the provisions of the code in Saskatchewan.

Responsibility on Province.

"I take this stand because of the provisions of the police agreement and the provisions of sub-section 14, section 92, of the British North America act, which imposes the responsibility for the administration of justice in the province upon the provincial government."

Earlier Premier J. G. Gardiner, of Saskatchewan, telegraphed Prime Minister R. B. Bennett, of Ottawa, offering to disband the men. He said they were willing to be disbanded by the provincial government. Late today it was reported the work would be started tonight under the direction of the Saskatchewan government, the men being transported to their homes from Regina.

Replying to Premier Gardiner, Prime Minister Bennett said:

"Your message received indicating your willingness to undertake work of disbanding strike marchers without sending them to Lumsden (where the Dominion government seeks to concentrate the men, offering them food and shelter). Please indicate just what this means in order that there may be no misunderstanding."

Investigation to Be Held.

(At Ottawa Bennett told the House of Commons an investigation into the fatal clash would be launched, his statement coming after his government had been assailed as responsible for the riots. At Val Cartier, Quebec, 1,900 men at the unemployment relief camp quit work pending settlement of their demands for higher wages and better food and living conditions.)

While strikers' representatives and the Saskatchewan government continued negotiations, with intimations that the government would provide food for thse still at the exhibitin grounds here, 41 men were under arrest on various charges in connection with last night's disorders.

Royal Canadian mounted police armed with rifles patrolled the exhibition grounds where between 1,400 and 1,600 were quartered.

The police said throwing of missiles at officers who went into the market square where strikers were meeting last night and arrested five or six leaders was the cause of the fighting.

they got as much as $1,000, he would "start a tent show, and they could dance in it." The Miller girl still maintains she did not know the other three had planned to kill the respected attorney, who came to Detroit in behalf of a threatened suit against the vast millions of the late multimillionaire, William H. Yawkey.

Schweitzer and the Jackson girls met Dickinson a week ago tonight in the Book-Cadillac Hotel dining room when he came over to their table and offered to buy them a drink. They accepted.

Planning his robbery the next morning they agreed it was too dangerous to "slug him," and decided to "use the gun," according to their confessions. Later that day Miss Miller joined the robbery plans.

Knowing Dickinson liked night clubs and beer gardens, they decided to get him drunk, and on a pretext of going out to dance, get him into Schweitzer's car. They did this and in Rouge Park Schweitzer said he killed the prominent man, remarking later "that's damn little to kill a man for," when they found less than $150 in Dickinson's pockets.

After a trip to Chicago, the four fled to Fort Wayne, Ind., and were captured there Saturday.

Schweitzer was downcast in his cell. The three women, still clothed in the cheap summer finery which he bought them in Chicago, were on the verge of collapse. All said they did not realize how they could have joined in such a wanton killing, unless it were in the hopes of getting work in Schweitzer's tent show.

"My husband never carried a gun and did not know how to use one," she said.

Tennessee Sends For Guilty Official

Ex-Surety Commissioner Seized in Florida.

By the Associated Press.

Tampa, Fla., July 2.—Tennessee sent to Tampa today for Joseph I. Reece, missing former Tennessee insurance commissioner, whose conviction on theft charges the Supreme Court of that State today affirmed.

Arrested last night at a tourist camp near here, the prisoner at first denied that he was Reece. Today Matt C. Beasley, assistant chief of detectives, said the man told him and other detectives that his name was Reece and he was the missing Tennessee official.

Beasley also quoted Reece as saying he had planned to return to Tennessee and kill Seth M. Walker, the man who prosecuted him on the theft charges.

The detective said Reece claimed his conviction and three to ten-year prison sentence was a political frame-up. He was charged with theft of $90,000 worth of bonds from the insurance department.

Christian Endeavor Is Urged to Crusade

Philadelphia Session Hears Pleas for Peace.

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, July 2.—Thousands of Christian Endeavorers from North and Central America tonight heard a summons to new Christian crusades for world peace, evangelization and alcohol education.

The Rev. Dr. Daniel A. Poling issued the call as keynote speaker at the thirty-fifth biennial convention of the International Christian Endeavor Union in the spacious municipal auditorium.

"Specifically, let us unite to secure adherence to the World Court, to make effectual the proposals of the President of the United States that the shipment of munitions to belligerent nations be prohibited, and to expand this principle until it covers loans both public and private to belligerent nations," he said. "Let us unite to promote disarmament by agreement and to help to stop the uncontrolled private manufacture of munitions."

Dr. Poling attacked what he called a "growing tide of suggestion, profanity and even printed filth, in both advertising copy and editorial content."

Quesenberry Pleads Guilty, Gets 20 Years

ing at me, I'd never have shot Mr. McClary, nor nobody else."

Old Tom's mountain world, he intimated before he was led away to city jail to await removal to Richmond, is a world of give and take. If somebody bothers you in this mountain world of stills and shotguns, you warn him. If he shoots at you, old Tom said, you have to shoot.

"I'm an old man now," sighed Quesenberry, as a shaft of sunlight fell on his weatherbeaten face, lighting a gleam in his single eye. "I'll never get out of jail. I'm going up for life. The court's been courteous. I gotta go soon, and I won't be coming back."

Quesenberry's move in pleading guilty came as a complete surprise.

Described as Mild Man.

Previously, when his trial began Monday, he pleaded not guilty. At one time during the morning session defense attorneys described him as innocent, and asked the State of Virginia to acquit him and let him go about his ways in peace.

But when Judge Alexander reconvened court after the noon recess, several hurried conferences between the defense attorneys and John Galleher, special prosecutor, and his assistants, G. Stanley Clarke, of Richmond, assistant State's attorney, and Albert Anderson, took place.

"My client wishes to reverse his plea to plead guilty," Hall then informed the bench.

So Old Tom was at the mercy of the court, where only a few hours before he had heard Hall describe him as a "kindly, mild-mannered, soft-spoken Virginian," whose lot in life had been none too easy.

Would Be Free at 76.

Judge Alexander declared a technical mistrial after he had been informed of Old Tom's decision.

In a swift rearraignment, Quesenberry pleaded guilty and got his sentence. Should he complete his term in Richmond, he will be 76 years old, and the law will reach its long arm down from Wisconsin, where he is facing a term of 15 years for his alleged participation in two other killings.

Four witnesses appeared against Old Tom during the session in this quaint old courtroom yesterday morning. Through them the State attempted to establish definitely the identity of Tom Quesenberry as the man who wounded George G. Kirkpatrick the day before McClary was killed.

The defense, on the other hand, tried to drive a wedge into the testimony, so that it might establish that no one acually was sure who had wounded Kirkpatrick, and brought on the manhunt, which was climaxed when Old Tom was captured after he shot McClary.

Kirkpatrick on Stand.

Kirkpatrick, revenue agent and traditional foe of moonshiners, was the first witness after a jury of 12 men—farmers and merchants of the rich Loudoun County area—had been selecte'.

The raid was reconstructed for the jury as Kirkpatrick talked. He told how, on March 16, Old Tom was trapped by the still and fired. Kirkpatrick described firing back once, and then realizing he was hit. He told how Old Tom vanished, running down a hillside, and how he was taken to the hospital.

Red-haired Paul Alexander, deputy sheriff of Loudoun County, was the next witness. He identified Old Tom as "the man in the gray cap," who shot from behind cover and wounded Kirkpatrick.

Next came J. R. Kerbie, deputy sheriff of Prince William County, a member of the posse that searched the hills above Goose Creek, in the region of Evergreen Mills, in the general manhunt after Kirkpatrick was shot.

It was this manhunt that brought a bullet from Old Tom's gun to put a leaden period after the life of Clarence McCrary, who volunteered to help catch the mountaineer.

Old Tom Identified.

Positive identification of Old Tom as the man who shot and killed McClary was made by the final witness of the day, Clyde Saunders, supervisor of the State Alcoholic Beverage Control Board of Virginia.

"That's the man who was firing the shots when McClary was killed," declared Saunders in a steady voice when he was asked if the killer was in the courtroom.

"What is his name?" asked Galleher.

Changes His Plea.

Saunders still was on the stand when Old Tom decided to plead guilty and spend the rest of his life behind the grim bars of Virginia Penitentiary.

Only once throughout the day did Quesenberry smile in that wistful, somewhat bitter manner of his.

With the sharp explosions many pairs of eyes wandered to the killer's face.

He smiled wryly, then tapped his temple and half laughed.

Holdup Nets Machine Gun Robbers $10,000 in Dunkirk.

By the Associated Press.

Dunkirk, N. Y., July 2.—Six robbers, two of them armed with machine guns, sprayed the business section of this city with bullets late this afternoon before holding up the Merchants National Bank and making off with $20,889.

The gang drove up to the front of the bank in the heart of the business section, in a large sedan.

Five of the bandits leaped from the machine, but were spied by Police Officer John Brooks. He fired at the men as they started in the direction of the bank with their machine guns, but was forced to cover when bullets began flying about him, shattering store windows and chipping stone walls.

One man remained in the car with a gun ready for action while five men entered the bank. Six customers and six employes were forced to lie on the floor under threats of death, while one of the holdup sextet shoved a gun into the face of Carl Frantzen, cashier, and ordered him to open the vault.

"I didn't have a chance to push the button operating the holdup alarm," Frantzen said. "Two shots were fired over my head and I was forced toward the vault, ordered to open the door and step aside while the unmasked man examined it for currency.

"Finding nothing, he toured the tellers' cages, scooping up cash lying on the counters and ransacking drawers for more currency."

As the men dashed from the bank, their lookout had their machine in motion before the last bandit had closed the door. They sped off in the direction of Fredonia.

Police said the license plates on the machine were reported stolen last night at Jamestown, N. Y.

11 Missing in Plane Sought by Russians

Moscow, July 2 (U.P.).—Battling fog and adverse winds, surface craft and airplanes today searched a wide area off Vladivostok for a plane carrying eight passengers and crew of three, missing since June 26.

Less than an hour after taking off from Alexandrovsk, Sakhalin Island, Alexander Viatogorov, pilot of the missing plane, asked for weather reports from Nignitombovka, where he had expected to land.

No word has been heard since the request for a weather report. For a week the Sakhalin region has been swept by storm or blanketed by fog.

Five Dead, Iowa Faces Renewed Flood Threats

All but Two in Boat Lost in River; New Crest Due; Families Flee.

By the Associated Press.

Des Moines, Iowa, July 2.—A new flood threat—the second in as many weeks—developed on the Des Moines River tonight as Iowa listed five persons as missing and heavy property loss from torrential rain.

The weather bureau warned lowland residents here to prepare for the highest flood water in recent years—at least 2 feet higher than the crest of last week's flood.

The five missing persons were believed by rivermen to have been drowned in the turbulent Mississippi River at Keokuk, when their small launch upset last night.

Only Two are Saved.

The missing men were Everett Eppers, 24; Jack Fallon, 26; Harry Wagner, 50, all of Keokuk, and Robert Lancashter, 50, of Memphis, Mo., and Glen Brainerd, a former resident of the Keokuk transient camp.

Clyde Anderson, 28, and Eli Rockefeller, 50, other members of the group, swam to shore after an unsuccessful attempt to locate their missing companions.

Receding flood water of smaller streams meanwhile left a trail of crop and property damage in central, northwestern and northeastern Iowa that runs into the thousands of dollars.

Dozen Families Flee.

A sudden downpour in Des Moines early today sent the normally shallow Walnut Creek west of Des Moines roaring down a mile-wide front. The water raced through the business section of suburban Valley Junction.

More than a dozen families fled from their homes, unable to remove household goods.

Several rundred feet of the Milwaukee Railroad tracks and a section of the Valley Junction street car line were washed out. An old steel and wooden bride also was swept away.

A cloudburst struck Boone, badly damaging a State park near there. Boone officials said storm damage would run into the thousands of dollars.

104 Lost at Sea As Holiday Boat Rams Freighter

147 Saved in Collision and Sinking of Japanese Ship at Night.

By the Associated Press.

Osaka, Japan (Wednesday), July 3.—The collision of a small Japanese cruise steamer with a freighter early today on the pitch dark, fog-bound Japanese inland sea claimed 104 lives, a check-up by shipping officials disclosed.

Crowded with holiday passengers, the Midori Maru rammed the freighter Senzan Maru at 1 a. m. and sank almost immediately.

Rescue vessels, including the Senzan Maru, picked up 91 of the 166 passengers of the Midori Maru and 56 members of the crew of 85 in the storm-tossed sea. Eleven bodies were recovered, including those of three women and an infant.

Carrying holiday makers to the hot water springs resort of Beppu, the 1,725-ton Midori Maru crashed into the larger Senzan Maru, of 2,775 tons, and sank within three minutes.

A screaming, terrorized mass of men, women and children was thrown into the dark water. The Senzan Maru quickly lowered her boats and wirelessed all nearby ports for aid.

Police motorboats responded and rescue work continued until daylight, when it became apparent further efforts were futile. The darkness and roughness of the water handicapped rescuers. Many victims were heard calling for help a few feet away, but in the darkness could not be found.

All the victims were believed to be Japanese. The Midori Maru carried 168 passengers and a crew of 85. Of the 140 missing, from 40 to 60 were believed to be members of the crew.

Divorce Granted To Colleen Moore

Freed From N. Y. Broker Who 'Made Her Wreck.'

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, July 3.—The belief that absence makes the heart grow fonder received a severe jolt in divorce courts here today.

Colleen Moore, screen actress, who for a time maintained a beautiful home here while her husband, Albert P. Scott, managed his brokerage office in New York, was granted a divorce after she testified his conduct made her a "nervous wreck."

Natalie Morehead, featured screen player who last August said she was separating from Alan Crosland, director, as a marital "cure," filed suit for divorce charging cruelty.

Miss Moore was granted her decree in the courtroom where in 1931 she was divorced from John E. McCormick, film producer.

Her complaint charged Scott was unreasonably jealous, rude to her friends, and twice left their New York home for Bermuda for the purpose of avoiding her.

"It made me so nervous and ill that I had to call a physician," she added. "It wasn't long before I became a nervous wreck."

Steel Labor Vote 87.1% For Own Representative

New York, July 2 (AP).—Employe representatives of their own choosing were elected by 87.1 per cent of the United States Steel Corporation employes eligible to vote, the corporation announced today.

The vote cast totaled 116,179 out of 133,370 who were eligible. The corporation said interest in the plan of employe representation, adopted some time ago, was so keen that more than 8,000 employes who were not at work on the day of election made special trips from their homes to the polling places to cast their ballots.

Elections were held throughout the past month at the various plants of the corporation's subsidiary companies.

Idle Insurance Bill Changes Forecast

Norton and King Predict Amended Measure.

Both Representative Mary T. Norton and Senator William H. King, chairmen, respectively, of the House and Senate District Committees, predicted yesterday that the Ellenbogen unemployment insurance bill will be amended to conform with the national social legislation and probably in accordance with requests of the District Commissioners.

The Senate District Committee will meet in special session as soon as conferees agree on the national bill, Senator King said. The commissioners probably will be called to pass upon the final draft of the District bill.

One of the major issues is whether the District government or employes shall be called upon to supplement a 3 per cent payroll tax. The commissioners and trade organization favor the employe assessment.

Services for John L. Hilleary, whose death occurred at his home, 1637 Thirty-fourth street northwest, will be conducted by the Rev. F. Bland Tucker, at St. John's Episcopal Church, Potomac and O streets northwest, at 10 a. m. today.

Burial will be at Columbia Garden Cemetery, Arlington, Va.

2 Auto Inspections A Year Combated

The Keystone Automobile Club yesterday called upon the House to defeat the bill reported by the House District Committee and providing a semi-annual mechanical inspection of all motor vehicles in the District.

George E. Keneipp, Keystone Club manager, said passage of the bill will not reduce traffic accidents and will impose a financial burden on Washington motor car owners.

"Of the 53,139 cars involved in mishaps during the years 1928 to 1934, inclusive, but 1,340 were mechanically defective," Keneipp said. "This is but 2.52 per cent of the total accidents.

"Furthermore, over the seven-year period defective cars reported as having been involved in accidents were but 0.1 per cent of the total registration of motor vehicles here.

Keneipp said that in practically all States in which compulsory inspection has been adopted, "largely after intensive campaigns by special interests, among them manufacturers of costly testing equipment, it has been a bitter disappointment."

The bill will be considered by the House next Monday.

Capital Cadet Wins Wings.

From a group of 15 flying cadets, completing one year of flying service with tactical groups at Langley Field, Norfolk, Va., Potter B. Paige, Washington, has been commissioned as second lieutenant, the Associated Press reported yesterday. Paige will be ordered to one year of active service.

Virgin Islands Quiz Very Dull, Ickes Leaves It

near loss of an equity in an inherited estate which the Government was purchasing.

Throughout the proceedings, Gov. Pearson, bespectacled and calm, sat with his legs crossed in a chair next to Secretary Ickes just behind the table reserved for witnesses.

More interesting was the passage between Senator Tydings (Democrat), Maryland, chairman of the committee, and Secretary Ickes, whose department has charge of the islands.

At the outset, Tydings refused a request of Ickes that he be permitted to start the testimony with a lengthy statement. The somewhat discomfited Department of Interior Secretary then asked an opportunity to cross-examine witnesses.

Ickes Insists on Defense.

"This is not a trial," Tydings responded. "The committee doesn't feel it proper to accord anyone the right of cross-examination."

Branding the charges of Paul Yates, former assistant to Pearson and now Pearson's principal accuser, as a "wild conglomeration of everything he could get out of the newspapers, some of which he wrote himself," Ickes stubbornly insisted on stating at least part of his defense of the island government.

The chairman assured the secretary would be given full opportunity to present his side, but said the committee "would not prejudge or prejudice" the case in advance of receipt of evidence.

Yates previously had intimated that he would bring the whole New Deal colonial administration of the Interior Department under fire in his testimony.

Edward J. Colgan, jr., Baltimore lawyer, is handling the hearings for the committee.

In a brief summation of Yates' charges, Colgan enumerated allegations of inefficiency, maladministration, petty persecution and incompetence which he said formed the bulk of the accusations. Misuse of Government funds and official corruption also were alleged.

In the midst of the hearing, Secretary Ickes departed with the remark that it was "very dull indeed."

The committee later recessed until today.

Note, Hat Lead Police to Body In C.&O. Canal

Former News Man, Jobless 2 Years, Despondent, Widow Says.

The body of Harry D. Cashman, 61, former newspaperman and manager of a local typewriting concern, was dragged from the C. & O. Canal yesterday, eight hours after a passerby in the 4900 block of Canal road northwest found his hat and a note on the bank.

Cashman disappeared Monday night after leaving his home in the 3600 block of Connecticut avenue northwest to attend a boxing match. Shortly after 7:30 a. m. yesterday, Jack Watts, of the 500 block of Canal road northwest, found the hat and note.

The note, unaddressed and apparently written by Cashman, told its finder that his body was in the canal. Police and volunteer searchers dragged the water until 3:30 p. m., when the body was found by James Goroum, of the 4900 block of Canal road northwest.

Cashman's wife told police he had been unemployed and despondent for nearly two years. At one time he was sports editor of the New York Sun, and previously worked on the San Francisco Chronicle, Mrs. Cashman said. He was last employed as manager of a Washington typewriter company.

Roosevelt Appoints Aviation Aid Body

Development of American Air Lines Is Aim.

By the Associated Press.

With huge American flying ships breezing new trails to foreign lands, President Roosevelt yesterday appointed an interdepartmental committee to aid this development.

He directed a study of civil international aviation "in all its phases" with the obvious objective of obtaining best possible treatment for American aviators and meeting foreign competition.

The President in his brief announcement ordered the study "in order that constant, effective consideration may be given the development of American Air Transport lines in foreign territories."

The committee includes R. Walton Moore, Assistant Secretary of State; Stephen B. Gibbons, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; Harllee Branch, Second Assistant Postmaster General, and John Monroe Johnson, Assistant Secretary of Commerce.

Street Parade to Mark Opening of Carnival

A gigantic street parade will mark the opening of the sixteenth annual St. Gabriel's Church carnival Monday night, it was announced yesterday by James W. Gessford, director general. The carnival, which will be held on the school grounds off Grant Circle, will come to a close on Saturday night, July 20. Thomas A. McNamara, of Baltimore, is handling plans for the parade.

Many new features have been added for this year's carnival, while all the old fixtures have been retained. One of this year's novelties will be the "Hey Dey" ride.

Island 'Terror' And Columnist Fight to Draw

the fight got under way without the usual preliminaries or introduction of other famous fighters from the ring.

Round One.

Round Two.

Yates tore from his corner, swinging both hands wildly against his antagonist. The more experienced Allen utilized his superior ringmanship to weather the storm, countering nicely, picking blows out of the air and dancing and ducking adroitly out of danger. Tired from his furious rally, Yates attempted to clinch, but the Writing Walloper lowered his bull-like head and plowed in unmercifully. He was belaboring Yates with both fists to the head and body when the Capitol Police Department, aided and abetted by several newspapermen who disapproved of the match because Allen had not made the weight, stepped in the ring and halted the action. Both boxers were removed to their dressing rooms in the Capitol Police Department's private jug for the customary showers and rubdowns to cool off.

Following the bout, both contestants were as well prepared with statements as a dethroned heavyweight champion.

"It was a premeditated and deliberate attack," charged Yates, disclaiming all responsibility. "It is on a par with the tactics of the Interior Department and the Pearson administration, and in line with the intimidation and mailed fist we've had to contend with ever since this trouble started."

"I had nothing whatever to do with any parties to the case," said Allen, who is a newspaper associate of Drew Pearson, son of the Governor. "Besides, Yates was the aggressor. He made a pass at me first."

Secretary Ickes, who arrived too late to witness the epic battle, expressed great regret at having missed the encounter.

"It must have been a great bout," the Secretary said. "I am sorry I missed it."

Nazi Youths Stage New Anti-Semitic Outbreak

Berlin, July 2 (AP).—For the second successive night, Nazi youths tonight staged antisemitic demonstrations in Berlin's Neukoelln district.

"Jew—Perish in Judah," was the admonition painted by the rioting youths on the windows of Jewish shopkeepers.

"Return to Palestine" was painted on scores of shops in the Hermannstrasse.

The demonstrations, however, lacked enthusiasm. Crowds of bystanders appeared indifferent and the listless youths, a majority between 16 and 18 years old, finally dispersed without police intervention.

Civilian Youths Rush Fort Myer For Army Study

215 Would-Be Officers in Cavalry to Assemble by Saturday.

In dilapidated roadsters, chauffeur-driven limousines and on foot, scores of youths between the ages of 17 and 21 arrived at Fort Myer yesterday to embark upon a month's C. M. T. C. cavalry training at Camp Ivy V. Henry.

By Saturday morning, when they will take the oath of allegiance, the campers will reach their full quota of 215 men. The oath will be administered by Maj. Gen. Arthur W. Brown, judge advocate general of the Army.

Camp Henry, named for an officer who distinguished himself in the Spanish-American War, is one of the few Citizens Military Training Camps which specialize in cavalry training. Only young men who have spent a season at an infantry camp are eligible for admission. Col. Kenyon Joyce, commanding officer of Fort Myer, will be in charge of activiteis.

Expert instructions will be given the enrollees by members of the 10th Cavalry Reserves, commanded by Col. John P. B. Clayton Hill. Mornings will be devoted to drilling and afternoons will be given over to recreation. Several sightseeing trips are planned.

The campers are residents of Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia and the District. Thirty are Washingtonians.

Islanders to Take Hygiene Courses

Training Offered Maryland Group First Time.

By the Associated Press.

Princess Anne, Md., July 2.—To approximately 800 persons in the three communities on isolated Smith's Island, 3 miles off the Somerset County mainland, the benefits of modern hygiene and scientific nursing are being brought for the first time.

Through the cooperation of the National Red Cross and its chapter at Crisfield, residents of Tylerton, Ewell and Rhodes Point now may take courses in personal hygiene, care and nutrition of babies, preventive health measures and home lighting, heating and ventilation.

Miss Virginia Elliman, an instructor from National Red Cross headquarters, has been placed in charge of the work on Smith's Island, in Tangier Sound. She will devote full time to classes for women and expects to remain at her post about eight weeks. Previously the islanders taxed themselves for the support of a resident physician.

Afloat Six Hours, 2 Rescued in Bay

Sloop Owner Pulls Baltimore Pair From Water.

By the Associated Press.

Love Point, Md., July 2.—Two men were rescued in the Chesapeake Bay today after floating on life preservers for six hours. They were Fred C. Williamson, 35, and Earle Donaldson, 25, both of Baltimore.

The two men left Baltimore early today in a 16-foot speedboat. They ran into rough water about half way between Seven Foot Knoll and Rock Hall, they reported, a heavy swell swept over their craft and it sank.

Four hours later five Naval airplanes flew over. Believing the planes were searching for them, Williamson and Donaldson waved frantically, but the craft swept on, passing within 300 feet of them.

About 2:30 p. m. an auxiliary power sloop, belonging to R. L. Heberling, of Philadelphia, was passing. Heberling saw the two men and took them aboard.

The rescued men were taken to Love Point.

O'Leary Heads Georgetown U.; Nevils to N. Y.

New President, D.C. Native, Has Served University for 23 Years.

New York, Boston, Providence, Philadelphia and Chicago.

Father O'Leary said he intended to do nothing with respect to the athletic policy at Georgetown at this time, especially in the absence of the Rev. John J. Kehoe, S. J., faculty adviser on athletics. When Father Kehoe returns, athletic matters probably will be considered.

Born Here in 1887.

The son of Timothy A. O'Leary, a veteran Baltimore & Ohio Railroad official who died here about five years ago, Father O'Leary was born September 27, 1887. He received his early education at Gonzaga College, entered the Society of Jesus in 1903 and was ordained by the late James Cardinal Gibbons in 1919 at Georgetown. He pursued his Jesuit training at St. Andrews-on-the-Hudson and at Woodstock College, Maryland.

He taught a year at Canisius College, Buffalo, and then joined the Georgetown faculty in 1912. He has specialized in ethics and later was made chairman of the faculty of philosophy and spiritual director. His new duties as president carry with them the chairmanship of the board of regents.

Dr. Nevils, who had previously served as university chancellor, college dean and regent of foreign service, has been signally honored by many foreign governments for his promotion of international intercourse through education.

Honored by Many Nations.

During his presidency he was made a grand officer and commander of the Order of the Crown of Italy, a chevalier of the French Legion of Honor, commander of the Star of Roumania, member of the Grand Cordon of the Order of St. Sava of Jugoslavia, grand officer of the Order of the White Star of Czechoslovakia, grand officer of the Order of Leopold II of Belgium, commander of the Order of Merit of Chile and chaplain of the Order of St. Lazare of Jerusalem.

He also had been appointed by President Roosevelt and former President Hoover on the board of visitors to the United States Military Academy and was the faithful friar of the fourth degree Knights of Columbus, Washington Assembly.

Dr. Nevils made the unusual record of building more than $2,000,000 worth of new construction at Georgetown during the depression at a time when construction was at low ebb. In 1924, before transferred for a four-year period as dean of the Shadowbrooke House of Studies at Stockbridge, Mass., he directed the Georgetown Endowment Association.

Tokyo Ignores Soviet Protest Over Frontier

Russia's Border Residents Anxious; Plot to Stir Trouble Feared.

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, July 2.—The situation in the Far East was studied closely by the Soviet Government tonight while Tokyo remained silent on a Russian note protesting border incidents.

Soviet authorities said they had received no reply to their protest yesterday to Japan against alleged frontier violations. The official news agency Tass carried a Tokyo dispatch quoting newspaper suggestions there that the frontier zone be demilitarized.

A Russian spokesman said incidents of the last few months extended along the whole Manchukuo frontier and that the situation bears the earmarks of a plot to provoke more serious complications.

Residents Anxious.

Residents in the neighborhood of Khabarovsk, one of the most important cities on the Soviet side of the border, were said to be filled with particular anxiety.

Soviet newspapers said the "plotters" are an influential Japanese clique and that responsibility for their actions rests squarely on the shoulders of the Japanese government.

The Soviet's controlled press charged Japan's "deliberate provocations along the Siberian border and Germany's asserted preparations to attack European Russia placed the Soviet in grave peril of war."

The Communist Party organ, Pravda, commenting on Russia's vigorous protest to Tokyo against alleged violations of Soviet territory by Japanese and Manchukuan forces during recent months, said:

"These incidents may be explained only in the sense that there is a definite plan by Japanese militarists to create complications on the frontier."

Pravda also said Russia's Baltic fleet was being increased to offset the concentration of German naval units in those waters, asserting Germany was preparing to use the Baltic as its base of operations against European Russia.

German warships are exploring the Gulf of Finland and Finnish fjords seeking naval bases, the newspaper added, and Germans are negotiating for permits to establish air bases in Finland.

"The Germans dream of conquering Soviet territory up to the Ural Mountains," the party organ charged. Consequently, it added, the Soviet must increase its defenses. Pravda said, "The Baltic fleet is growing in size from year to year." The fleet now is conducting war maneuvers, with Kronstadt as its base, the paper stated.

Another militant anti-Japanese note was sounded by the organ of the war department, the Red Star, which demanded that an end be put "once and for all" to incursions into Russia's Far Eastern territory.

Militarists Warned.

A "greater Japan"—at the expense of the Soviet—is the aim of Japanese militarists, it added, saying "it would be very dangerous to mistake our efforts to prevent war for a sign of weakness." The Red Star issued this warning:

"We suggest that the Japanese militarists keep this in mind—if any one with an imperialistic lust attempts to push back our frontiers, he will receive a blow that will make him reluctant to repeat the adventure for a long time."

Pravda said responsibility for invasion of Soviet territory and "murder" of Soviet frontier guards "rests exclusively on the Japanese government," and the strongly worded note delivered at Tokyo expressed the same contention. It said continuation of incidents similar to those in which four frontier guards allegedly have been slain "may have very serious consequences in the relations of the U. S. S. R. and Japan and on peace in the Far East."

New Road Link Into D.C. Opens To Autos Today

Massachusetts Avenue Extension Completed at $120,810 Cost.

Massachusetts avenue extended will be opened to traffic today.

The road, which links Massachusetts avenue with River road and Conduit road, cost $120,810 and required ten months to construct.

Less than 2 miles of road was built, but its construction makes possible development of a large area of hitherto almost inaccessible territory and provides a shorter route for residents of western Montgomery County to Washington.

It was estimated that the driving time between Cabin John, Glen Echo Park and other Conduit road communities will be cut by five to ten minutes. Among the other recreational centers in the county which will be provided with short cuts to Washington will be the National Woman's Club, Burning Tree Golf Club, Congressional Country Club and the National Capital Horse Show grounds at Bradley Farms.

A movement has been started to obtain surfacing of the unimproved section of Seven Locks road which would give an outlet from Rockville to the new road and provide a direct route downtown.

Liquor Licenses Fight Renewed In Mt. Rainier

Citizens For mAssoiation to Combat Sales in the Town.

About 50 persons living in Mount Rainier, Md., met at the Methodist Church Monday night, formed the Citizens Protective Association, and declared their intention to reopen the battle on liquor sales in the town.

Officers of the new association are: President, Glenn Hunter; vice president, Phillip C. Dorr; secretary, Roger W. Moser; and treasurer, Homer L. Stanforth. Bird H. Dolby was named legal counsel. An executive committee was formed, consisting of the officers and Roy T. Fowkes, R. E. Aikin, and Mrs. Annie Leather.

The first step in their fight on the liquor traffic will be to ask an injunction on the opening of a beer place for which a leiense was granted recently to Carl Glein. Because the suit could not be fought in the name of the association, W. C. Murphy volunteered to act as plaintiff for the group. A house to house canvass will be made for funds to carry on the legal case.

The association also will seek a court ruling on the section of the town's charter which forbids the sale of liquor. In 1933 the former Assistant Attorney General ruled that this section had been repealed by the State's local option act of 1917.

The organization meeting was attended by Mayor Norman A. Pruitt, who said helieved that the town council was in favor of barring further liquor licenses. Other members of the council also were present. A referendum showed 470 votes against sales and 311 for liquor selling.

What Price Security?

The death of a prominent Boston yachtsman and his two sons, bringing the total of this ocean race to four, is a tragic ending to a sporting beginning. In a 49-foot ketch, Robert R. Ames and five youthful sailors started on June 8 to race to Bergen, Norway, competing against five other yachts. Eleven days later the navigator was washed overboard and his sons gave their lives in a heroic attempt to save him.

There is, and always will be, something completely romantic about battling the elements. Especially is this true in the case of sailing light but seaworthy craft, a pastime which is coming more and more to the fore not only in a competitive way, but as a relief from the problems of our civilization. To those who want to "get away from it all," the very sight of a sail on the horizon is synonymous with escape. For the benefit of those interested in boats as adventures in competition, numerous cruising clubs have sprung up all along our seacoasts. They have carried the sport into even more thrilling channels by instigating races to foreign shores.

Sailing is a clean and beautiful classic of the struggle against nature. Its appeal is rooted in the risk involved. At a time when the effort of society is to provide security for its humbler units, the willingness of those adventurers aboard the Hamrah to stake their lives against the sea is the more striking. Unhappy the land whose youth decides that the opportunities of living are more vital than the opportunity to live.

Georgetown's New President.

With the announcement of a new president for Georgetown University, Washington must bid farewell to a great and able leader as it rejoices in the naming of a native son to succeed him. Dr. Nevils, who has directed the affairs of the venerable institution for the past seven years, expects to leave the city on his new and as yet unannounced assignment after serving the university for 16 years as regent, dean, chancellor and president. With him will go the acclaim and affection of Washington, for he was in every respect an honorable man and one to whom the entire community turned for inspiration.

The selection of the Rev. Arthur A. O'Leary as his successor will surprise few, for only last fall he was chosen as acting president while Dr. Nevils journeyed to Japan. Washington takes particular interest and pride in his appointment because Father O'Leary is the first Washingtonian to attain to the presidency in the course of Georgetown's 146 years. Moreover, he is one of the few professors to be drafted from the faculty for the position. A professor of ethics and philosophy, he has served at Georgetown for 23 years, almost the longest term of any priest now at the Hilltop.

Georgetown may consider its future with complete equanimity. Firmly set on its course by the genius of Dr. Nevils, it now will proceed under the direction of a man whose ability and loyalty have long since been proven, who is held in highest esteem both by the institution itself and the community of which it is an integral part.

Novels Into Ploughshares.

Looking backward over novels of the World War, the Saturday Review seeks a moral in their change of emphasis and in their latest phase finds some faith for peace. Such of these "war stories" as now have vogue are vigorous condemnations of militarism. The Saturday Review hopes this indicates enough detestation of the last war to put up a substantial opposition to the next.

The hope is widely shared. But it will have to be substantiated by better evidence than fiction fashions. It is true that, when the World War started, novel readers preferred such romanticising of the conflict as Robert W. Chambers performed in "The Girl Philippa." Then came writing of the Arthur Guy Empey type. Finally followed the realistic reaction extending from "All Quiet" to the recent "Paths of Glory" by Humphrey Cobb.

Yet if this chronology proves anything, it merely proves again that fiction readers are fickle. A similar list of changes could be compiled of stories on any of a dozen themes—and, provided the themes were old enough, such lists would show the pendulum swinging backward and forward through each separate theme. The arc was wide from "Ivanhoe" to "Tess of the D'Urbervilles." But after "Tess" came "The Prisoner of Zenda." After that came "Main Street" and then "Anthony Adverse."

Detestation of war in the abstract is unquestionably increasing. It is a detestation ably reflected in the field of fiction. Nevertheless, the literary fact is that no sort of fiction is popular for long, and that every sort of fiction is from time to time popular. It would be difficult to name a period in which the fiction taste of the public has been a reliable indication of the public's deeper and more abiding sentiments.

Banking Bill Revisions.

Tribute to the painstaking work done by its sub-committee is implied by the prompt approval the Senate Banking Committee has given to the revised banking bill. For weeks this sub-committee, guided by Senator Glass, has been laboring over the Administration's draft legislation. Certain of the original proposals have been strengthened. Others have been eliminated or revised. In the honest effort to improve the measure is striking illustration of the value of truly cooperative action by Executive and Legislature, the more pointed because the improvement brought by the changes is generally admitted.

The importance of keeping the banking system free from political control is recognized by the provision that the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency should be dropped from membership in the reorganized Federal Reserve Board. Insistence that no more than four members of the proposed seven-member board should belong to the same political party further attests the desirability of keeping the agency nonpartisan, as it has not been lately. It is unfortunate that a bipartisan set-up must be relied upon to achieve nonpartisan characteristics. But the device works well when emphasis is placed on the abilities rather than the party affiliations of the appointees.

The 14-year term for board members, without privilege of reappointment, is open to some criticism. It is properly pointed out that it may be hard to get the best-qualified men to take an office which separates them from private occupation for so long a period without making public office a life career. In order to meet Governor Eccles' contention that the Reserve Board should have the same independence of viewpoint as the Supreme Court, effort may be made to reinsert the pension provision. Certainly the door has not been closed to further consideration of either important details or of matters of more fundamental controversy.

In confronting the larger issue of centralization of power in the banking field the Senate sub-committee has done a very deft and seemingly workmanlike job. A fair division of representation between the board and the banks is suggested in the field of open-market operations, while careful provision is made to insure workability and to prevent a recalcitrant attitude by member banks. In determining reserve requirements, restrictions are placed on any arbitrary exercise of power by the Reserve Board. Elasticity in eligibility is provided without removing all limits on executive action. And, as contrasted with the House bill, there is no increase in Reserve Board power over the discount rate.

In the delicate field of credit control, therefore, the Senate committee has endeavored to simplify and strengthen Reserve Board action without creating unnecessarily arbitrary powers for this body. The importance of banking unification is not forgotten, and the draft would insure hastening of this desirable tendency. But safeguards are also erected against the opposite extreme of centralizing all control in the hands of the Government.

The bill as finally reported to the Senate is an illustration of good legislative practice. Without being immune from criticism, it represents the scientific approach. Effort has been made to establish sound guiding principles, within the confines of which good administration can operate effectively.

Curb The Honker.

A writer in the New York Times points out that the automobile horn has come to be internationally recognized as a nuisance. In Italy, almost every municipality prohibits the blowing of horns in inhabited areas. This has resulted in slowing down city traffic, but only slightly. More interesting, the accident rate shows a definite decrease, which tends to confirm the argument that too many drivers depend upon loud blasts rather than brakes to prevent collisions.

In Stockholm horns may not be blown except as a signal that one driver wishes to pass another. Throughout built-up neighborhoods in England no horns may be sounded between 11:30 p. m. and 7 a. m. In the opinion of Leslie Hore-Belisha, Minister of Transport, "there is overwhelming evidence that the establishment of silent zones has contributed greatly to the general comfort without constituting a source of danger."

Paris for the past seven years has forbidden all tooting between 10 p. m. and 7 a. m. and is now debating the 24-hour taboo on klaxons, which has for years been enforced in Geneva. The traffic code of the Reich forbids horns that "create unnecessary noise" and any with more than one tone. And the word from Vienna is that honking will be outlawed there within the next few months.

Washington, of course, is under no compulsion to follow Europe simply because Europe is Europe. But in this matter it might well consider the examples set abroad. The cacophony of compressed air bugles, two-tone trumpets and wailing sirens that daily assaults the nerves of the city constitutes a serious menace to health. Moreover, much of the blasting is unnecessary, serving mostly as a release for the irritations of numbskull drivers. If, by regulating honking, a certain composure might be regained to say nothing of the accident rate lowered, would it not be unqualified progress?

Blow To Hysteria.

The smashing defeat which the House administered to the "death sentence" clause, before passing the holding company bill, will rank among the significant events of the year. The decision to regulate instead of arbitrarily destroying far-flung utility systems is highly important in itself. But the underlying implications of the vote transcend the immediate effects of this or any other specific piece of legislation.

By a major effort the House has resumed the function for which it exists. As Representative Huddleston said, Congressmen may rightly feel that they have taken back into their own hands "the right to legislate for the United States." That momentous achievement was inadequately reflected, even by yesterday's overwhelming vote against the "death sentence." In the actual debate of the House it looms up as a real landmark of the Roosevelt Administration.

Members of the House were under terrific pressure, as Representative Michener said, from both sides. Power trust lobbyists have certainly used all the influence at their command. On the other hand, the Administration's "uncontrolled wrath against the utilities companies" has been clearly manifested by the activities of White House pressure men, as well as by alleged political threats and intermittent promises of reward through the $4,880,000,000 work relief fund. In spite of these frenzied appeals, the House rose to the stature of true statesmanship and decided the issue on its merits.

The courageous attitude assumed by Representative Huddleston last week became infectious. Moreover, Congressmen seem to have been thrown back upon fundamental principles by the utter confusion around them. As an escape from the sadistic spree to which they were invited many reverted to the more sober judgment of the Democratic platform. Others cast politics entirely aside and joined Representative Randolph in his admirable position: "For me there is a solemn duty to be fair and just."

The effects of this revolt against mob psychology should be far-reaching. It is a salutary check to those who are willing to approve any governmental extravagance or wild proposal merely on the ground that the country is engaged in "war" against the depression. For once the House has courageously routed this hysterical attitude. Principle and common sense have been placed above emotionalism as the controlling factor in legislation.

The reaction of the House against frantic punitive measures is the more significant because it follows on the heels of the successful resistance of Congress to proposals for the hasty enactment of a shallow and partial tax program. In each instance recklessness, in no way warranted by emergency conditions, has been checked. The House has given the President notice that he can no longer send ill-considered bills to Congress without expecting careful analysis of their content.

If this means the end of legislation by appeal to prejudice and play upon ignorance, the country may well regard protraction of this session of Congress as worthwhile.

The Election Of Mrs. Doyle.

When Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle was nominated for president of the Board of Education it was remarked that any antipathies toward a woman as president must be put aside in view of the record of her seven years' service. Washington can not fail to concur unanimously with this sentiment.

Mrs. Doyle has combined her knowledge of and interest in Washington affairs with graceful tact and a rare understanding of educational problems. Her elevation to the presidency of the board comes, therefore, as a fitting acknowledgment of devoted and able services already rendered. But there are other and more significant considerations in her election. With her feminine point of view, she will doubtless provide a perspective on school affairs that could not be expected from masculine members of the board.

Mrs. Doyle has no easy task before her. To direct the governing board of Washington's school system, to speak for the parents and taxpayers as against the views of school superintendents, is no perfunctory assignment. It requires vision, industry, honesty and sometimes courage, all of which are admirably blended in the person of Mrs. Doyle.

NYA—A New One.

From the Detroit News.

President Roosevelt announces creation of the National Youth Administration, financed with $50,000,000 of the $4,000,000,000 work relief fund. It has three avowed purposes: jobs, training and education for those having trouble to get a start in life.

The Government in Washington will have the task of demonstrating that it can improve on already established agencies having the same purpose.

As to the undertaking to "find employment in private industry for unemployed youths," unless the establishment of a system of Federal employment bureaus is meant, the purpose of the Administration is yet to be revealed.

At any rate, the President's declaration, "We can ill afford to lose the skill and energy of these young men and women. They must have their chance in school, their turn as apprentices and their opportunity for jobs—a chance to work and earn for themselves," will rank among the great expressions of good intentions of history.

Help For Youth.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "Lives there a man with soul so dead" who hasn't during the past five years pitied the plight of the younger generation of school and college age? And is there a single American who didn't thrill at the President's act this week in signing an executive order making available $50,000,000 for the use of our young people? Such an investment, he said in his speech, "should pay a high rate of dividends."

Each June, for the past half decade, our colleges and schools have been turning out thousands of young people with four or more years of arduous work to their credit which was meant to fit them for their work in life. But to these young people commencement time must have hung over them like a death sentence. They were turned loose into a world already taking care of 20,000,000 people, unable to take care of themselves, and a world that has no need for more laborers, no matter how well trained.

To those who are bemoaning the possibility that they may be forced to pay slightly higher taxes, it might be well for them to consider that this is only one of the hundred Government services their taxes help to finance. Shall we continue to neglect our youth or shall we give them the break to which they are entitled?

When this new youth bureau is in operation perhaps we shall have less reason to worry about communism and some of the other isms fostered by the ever-deepening sense of unrest, discontent and maladjustment besetting our country.

MISS F. L. PARKER.
Washington, June 28.

Jefferson Memorial.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Judging from my own personal experience and observations, the American citizen from early childhood links the name of Thomas Jefferson and the Declaration of Independence. Future generations should be stimulated to perpetuate this early American tradition.

This great document and its author electrified the patriots of the Continental Congress and aroused their enthusiasm to the pitch that resulted in its adoption.

For this and other good reasons it appears to me to be manifestly appropriate that the proposed Jefferson Memorial shall symbolize enthusiasm and "electrify" the imagination of all who look upon it. Therefore my suggestions include:

That the location be preferably on the high ground on Capitol Hill;

That it be electrified to increase its impressiveness by both day and night;

That in its marble base be a suitable repository to preserve safely for all time the original Declaration of Independence;

That the top of the memorial be an electrified (illuminated from within), heroic-size statue of Jefferson;

The pedestal could include a small museum of the most famous relics having a connection with Jefferson's life, including, if possible, the best painting in existence of Jefferson.

Holding And Mothering.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is curious how some people get shocked over what ought to appeal to best emotions of mind and heart. There was, for instance, a living picture in the gallery of the House of Representatives last week of an infant being nourished at the breast of its mother. It would seem that healthy-minded persons would see only something natural and beautiful in such relation of mother and baby. But to the guard in the gallery it was dreadfully shocking. Mother and baby were promptly ejected. The incident made so much "news" it was telegraphed all over the country.

I was in the gallery at the time listening to the debate on utility holding companies. It almost seemed as if the rude ousting of the holding mother and subsidiary child was by way of emphasizing the speech of Congressman Rayburn on the "shocking" relations of mother-holding companies and their subsidiaries. Anyone familiar with public utilities must know that many operating companies are too weak to live without the capital, credit and engineering experience of parent-holding companies.

The little infant in arms was hardly responsible for the shock its mother gave honorable members of Congress. But it was ousted along with its mother, even though feeding time for the hungry mite. In the same way our brain trusters would purge this country of both mother and children corporations.

Our own Roosevelt obviously hates all mother-holding companies not merely in the utility but in all industries. Unless checked by Congress and the Supreme Court he will doubtless eventually purge us of all corporate family life except what the brain trusters plan for, of and by bureaucracy under multiple combinations of the alphabet.

Will History Repeat?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: About 2½ centuries ago Charles I of England demanded "the control of the purse," which belonged by immemorial right to the Commons of Great Britain. Charles had a prime minister, the Earl of Strafford, who supported him in these contentions; the motto of Strafford being "thorough," meaning "must." Then one day a plain citizen named Oliver Cromwell walked into the subservient Parliament and when they met him with cries of usurpation and the mace of the Speaker was raised against him, Cromwell said, "Take away that bauble, we are done with you." Then followed in England civil war.

Insincere and treacherous to the last, Charles put the blame upon Strafford. Strafford was duly tried in the great hall of William Rufus in Westminster and convicted. When he appeared before the London crowd with the edge of the executioner's ax turned against him, notifying the mob of his conviction, he turned to the executioner and said, "Put not thy trust in princes nor in the sons of men." Charles signed Strafford's death warrant. Later, in a little room off the House of Lords, Cromwell signed the death warrant of Charles, written in beautiful Latin by the exquisite genius of John Milton, who was secretary to the protector of the Commonwealth.

Are we of America to go through this again in the upward trend of Anglo-Saxon civilization? The House of Representatives seems to have no realization of the mighty principles with which they are dealing. ROWLAND B. MAHAN.

"Heart-Rending" Statements.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I most emphatically protest against the proposed bill designed to legislate the "holding companies" out of existence.

I have just found out that they are philanthrophists and public benefactors, and if any one doubts it, just read the statements of their officers and lobbyists. It is heart-rending to read of their solicitude for the "poor" stockholders of their companies. B. E. McCANN.

A Veteran's Query.

To The Editor of The Post—Sir: I am a Spanish War veteran who was stationed on Samoa Island for six months with dessicated potatoes and onions to eat, sleeping, if one could, under a tent on the ground.

The 15 per cent economy act was passed for two years' duration only. All Federal employes have now been restored to full pay. What about the few old men who served from 1899 to 1904 in the Philippine Insurrection? HENRY LENOX.

Plaint Of A Tired Democrat.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Just because an investor puts his money in stock of leading American corporations, why should the so-called New Deal penalize him in comparison with other forms of investment? I am wondering if the millions of Americans who have modest investments in stocks visualize what increased taxes on corporation mean to them.

The Government proposes raising the taxes on corporations for the purpose, it is claimed, of making the big ones split up. Who is going to get hurt by such a policy? As I see it, the small investors are the ones that are going to take the beating because most of the larger corporations in America are owned by them in the form of common stock. When President Roosevelt and his cohorts propose to increase corporation taxes 25 per cent or 50 per cent it is no other than a move to cut the profits of such corporations and cutting profits means reduced dividends for small stockholders who own the companies.

The chaps who are getting the gravy in American corporations are the officers and not the stockholders. We read of an executive of a tobacco machinery company receiving $200,000 out of a little more than $1,000,000 net earnings and this is typical of salaries paid to officials of the corporations on which Roosevelt wants to put additional tax. I looked in vain in either his, or Congress' tax plan, to see that corporations were going to get relief from payment of such high salaries to officials, but I can't find a word. I wrote to the Security Exchange about it and they said they can't do anything about it!

If what I say isn't true let some enthusiastic New Dealer reply to this letter and point out where I am wrong. I am tired of having bunk fed to me from the White House and Congress, notwithstanding I have been a Democrat for the past 45 years. It is an insult to label all Americans as being so naive. HARRY W. WOOTON.

The Post Impressionist

Proving the Murder

Post Office, Wednesday.

IF history is made—is that news? We ask because, the other day, the British House of Lords quashed a conviction for murder—the very first time in its somewhat lengthy life. Yet the Post-Impressionist's vigilant eye detected no reference to the event in either the columns of our own estimable newspaper or those of any of our American contemporaries.

If a principle of law, touching life and death, is finally fixed by the highest tribunal of that country upon whose Common Law our American law is largely founded—is it news for the U. S. A.?

We ask because this is what did happen in the instance to which we have herein above referred.

According to all English and American law "a man accused of a crime is presumed innocent until proven guilty."

Of course, as a matter of sentimental fact, a woman accused—

But we won't go into that.

And we won't go into any questions about the influence of the Code Napoleon upon the State of Louisiana—or into the Third Degree . . .

The Anglo-Saxon legal principle places all the onus of proof—oh, well, the burden of proof, if you like!—upon the prosecution.

However—

Suppose the prosecution proves the killing, does it have to prove a murderous intent—if it wants a sustainable conviction in the first degree?

Well, you'd certainly think so.

And yet listen to the story of Reginald Woolminton. An ordinary British court found him guilty of murder when murderous intent was unproven, and the extraordinary British Court of Criminal Appeal (the very name of which seems to presuppose the criminality of all appellants) sustained that conviction.

* * *

Fifteen days before last Christmas, our said namesake—21, farm laborer, of Castleton, Somersetshire—had the nerve, or the misfortune, to kill his wife. He was arrested. He was tried by the assize court. He was found guilty and condemned to be hanged by the neck until he was "dead—dead—dead."

And he appealed.

So far, it sounds like any American murder case, does it? Wait a minute.

Unlike a good many appeals in American capital cases, this one was dismissed, last March, by that court of criminal appeal to which we have already referred.

Then Reggie's case did something that was really rare. It went to the House of Lords.

In certain circumstances of "pure law," English lawyers may manage that—though, the average Englishman preferring that a man should be hanged rather than that he should be unusual, they usually (in criminal cases) don't try to manage it. Theoretically, it is an appeal to the whole House of Lords. Practically, however, it is heard by the law lords, the legal luminaries of Britain's Upper House.

And these were the ones that illuminated R. Woolmington's appeal: the Lord Chancelor, the Lord Chief Justice, Lord Atkin, Lord Tomlin and (another of the present chronicler's namesakes—rather a family affair, this) Lord Wright.

For "the appeal was heard pursuant of the flat of the Attorney General that" it "involved a point of law of exceptional public importance."

It seems the trial judge had charged his jury that "the onus of proving the shooting accidental" rested on the defence. Now, Woolmington's lawyer urged that "intention had been the essence of the crime of murder from the time when the crime of modern murder"—lucid phrase!—"began to be known." An indictment for murder meant "for murder with intention." Therefore, the judge should have charged, not that it was up to the defence to prove accident, but that it was up to the prosecution to prove, in addition to the killing, what the intent of the killer was.

Mr. Trapnell, K. C. (director of public prosecutions—Dickens didn't invent his name), argued for the view of the two lower courts: "The true principle of law was that, once a killing was proved—so the London Times paraphrases this King's Counsel—"the presumption of malice which arose showed that the act must be regarded as an intentional act without lawful excuse, unless the circumstances of the case, or the evidence of the accused person, alleviated the offence."

But that argument wouldn't go down.

Most Americans will wonder why the case ever got beyond the first appellate court.

The Lasting Effect.

WHILE the stories of personal experiences which members of the House had with the Administration's lobbyists flew thick and fast yesterday the most important one, perhaps, seems to have been overlooked. Unless the Administration goes back on its word because of the disastrous defeat it suffered every New Deal agency hereabouts will in the future have a man whose sole job will be to deal with members of Congress on matters of patronage.

This good news is what might be called the crowning concession made to the boys on the hill even as the famous teller vote on the so-called death clause in the utility bill was being taken. As it turns out it had no effect, but it explains at least why some members of the House Steering Committee were not present on the floor to be counted.

The patronage squawks of the House members have been loud and insistent and of long duration. Some time ago the President's contact man, former Congressman Charlie West, promised to remedy the situation. But days passed and nothing was done.

Just before the vote was taken Monday, Chairman Sabath of the House Steering Committee, called the committee together and jubilantly announced that the Administration had seen the error of its patronage ways and had agreed to place a man in every agency to watch out for the House members. As already said, some of the members were so excited about this news that they didn't get into the House to participate in the vote. The new patronage arrangement was not announced as being contingent upon the pending vote. Presumably it will be carried out regardless of the outcome in the utility fight.

It is doubtful if such an arrangement would have worked out very well several months ago. Because then we had so many agencies which were non-political, which were interested solely in the public weal. Outstanding among these lofty-minded agencies were Harry Hopkins' relief organization and Harold Ickes' PWA. These gentlemen have recently made it known, however, that they have learned a lot since they have been in Washington. Mr. Ickes went so far as to say, in fact, that a man couldn't be a good government administrator unless he understood politics. And Mr. Hopkins has developed so far in understanding the game that he said he was sure the Standard Oil Company wouldn't employ men opposed to it, meaning, of course, that it was logical for the Administration to take the same attitude. He didn't develop his thesis to the point that most people are for any undertaking that employs them.

The educated views of Harry and Harold serve to show how well the patronage arrangement might work out now, whereas it would not have before. For example, when Emil Hurja was in Ickes' office as Jim Farley's representative he and Ickes didn't get along at all. The impression is now that he would be taken back with open arms.

• • • •

The fact that Harry and Harold have so completely changed their views and particularly Harry's Standard Oil analogy might be taken as a big business trend on the part of the Administration, that is, that it is going in more and more for big business' tactics. In fact, some of the conservative friends of the Administration who are always trying to explain it might describe this as a definite swing to the right.

If they do they should by no means overlook the episode in the bonus fight. The Administration thought its back was against the wall this time. So Secretary Morgenthau's office called the National Manufacturers' Association and asked them to please do their stuff. It is understood that the association tried to appear innocent and told Mr. Morgenthau's office that it really didn't know what he meant, what stuff was it he wanted it to do, and that Mr. Morgenthau's office, being unsophisticated in such matters, really didn't know just how to explain what it was it wanted the association to do, but said that before it, Mr. Morgenthau's office, had come here from New York it used to read in the papers and in those books about Washington that there were things the association could do and it wished the association would do them. The association was right flattered because it was the first time anyone in the Administration had spoken to it in two years.

The Hopei 'Conquest'

Waning Confidence In Army Accounts For Latest Move Against A Prostrate China; Rich Province May Have Been Objective In Manchukuoan Campaign.

The following analysis of the Far Eastern scene is written by a former managing editor of the Japan Advertiser, now recently returned to Japan where he is writing special articles for The Post.

By Frank H. Hedges.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Tokyo.

HOPEI PROVINCE—the old Metropolitan Province when Peiping was still Peking and still the capital of China—is as completely under the control of Japan today as is Manchukuo; as is the city of Tokyo. There exists now, south of the Great Wall and north of the Yellow River, a buffer state which is not a state, which may not prove to be a buffer but which is unquestionably Japan's advance guard on the continent of Asia.

Cable and radio dispatches during the past few weeks have been carrying the story of how the Japanese military command in Tientsin, one of the two great cities embraced in the Province of Hopei, have protested because the Chinese government was not observing the terms of the Tangku Truce, a Sino-Japanese military agreement concluded in order to stem the Japanese advance south of the Great Wall into China proper. The terms of that truce have never been published, and the general public is left to conjecture as to what they may be.

That conjecture is not so difficult. As to exact terminology the mystery remains, but as to the general objectives arrived at there can be no question. It boils down to the fact that Japan is to dictate the policy of the Peiping-Tientsin arena.

• • • •

THE past few weeks have more than confirmed this. Trouble of a nature that seemed serious to the Japanese war office broke out in Tientsin. Two Chinese journalists had been murdered. One may well ask what concern that might be for the Japanese army, but it was known throughout North China that these two journalists were in the employ of that army of "occupation," and their murder must be honestly attributed to this fact. The ministry of foreign affairs in Tokyo has frankly acknowledged that these two men were Japanese army employes since their murder—or assassination. It was the only way to make plausible the subsequent action of the war office.

That action has been cabled around the world. While the ministry of war in Tokoyo maintained a more or less discreet silence, Chinese officials in Tientsin, Peiping, Nanking and Shanghai did not hesitate to publish the terms of the set of demands made upon them by the Japanese army. They were called an ultimatum, and the Tokyo foreign office hastened to explain that they were not an ultimatum according to the definitions of international law because they did not stipulate a time limit and for other technical reasons. It now develops, from the mouths of Japanese army officers that they did contain a time limit, but whether technically they constituted an ultimatum or not is beside the question. In effect they did, and China bowed before it.

What else colud China do? Here is a strong power in eastern Asia, the only really strong power in all Asia within the memory of living man, on the one hand, and on the other is a sadly disrupted and disunited China. The Nineteenth Route army did a magnificent job in the defense of Shanghai a few years ago, but there are all too few Nineteenth Route armies in the Chinese Republic. A repeat performance can not be expected. At least, it can not be depended upon.

• • • •

FROM the Tokyo angle it seemed when this most recent trouble broke in North China that it might be primarily a quarrel between the two groups which seek to control Japan's foreign policy—the militarists and the diplomats. Since September 18, 1931, the date of the Mukden incident, which led to the creation of the Empire of Manchukuo with Kang Teh as its nominal head, until the present moment the Japanese army has dominated public opinion in Japan. Recently it seems to have been losing some of its sway over the popular mind, and once that is lost it sinks into second or third place, for public opinion is the ultimate court in Japan just as in any other nation once it is able to assert itself.

Japan, the Japan which I know intimately, has not been normal for almost four years. Instead of the normal there has existed a war psychology. That is understandable to all who remember the American attitude in 1917-1918. When a man considers his country's destiny at stake he does not think straight. There is one thing and one thing only uppermost in his mind, and that is to preserve his nation's life and future. All else goes by the board.

Such a psychology has existed in Japan now for almost four years. Opinions may differ as to its justification, but it must be honestly admitted that it exists. Once this is realized, the public support of the Japanese army's activities in Manchuria and North China—as well as Shanghai, although that is in a different category—will be understood.

• • • •

AS long as the army, or any other group, is able to give the public what the public thinks it wants and needs it will remain dominant. This has been taking place in Japan for nearly four years, but a change is gradually making itself apparent in the reaction of the public toward the army's policy. It is not vociferous, it is not even spoken above a whisper, but the Japanese nation as a whole does not place that absolute faith and confidence in the army which it did three years ago. One can not be in Japan and be sensitive to Japanese thought and emotion without realizing this.

If the American observer feels this truth, how much more so must the Japanese War Office? Therefore, from the standpoint of the War Office, the necessary thing to do was to see that Japan once more thought its destiny menaced by China. That is the simplest explanation of the recent trouble in Hopei and its aftermath, an aftermath which brings glory to Japanese arms from a Japanese viewpoint, but it is too simple to be the whole explanation.

Rather, the peaceful "conquest" of Hopei Province with its two great cities of Tientsin and Peiping is another forward step in the basic plan of Miyakesaka (the Japanese War Office) as regards the Continent. Such a plan has long existed. It has existed, although details must have been altered from time to time, ever since Japan emerged into the world at large and saw the possibility of a great future before it. Japan in itself has become a great nation, able to make its voice respected and listened to at international gatherings, but Japan has no illusions as to this. It knows full well that it must be well grounded economically in order to maintain this position, and that in order to be so it must either possess or control the economic resources and the markets of that part of the Asiatic Continent immediately adjacent to it.

• • • •

HAVING this plan in mind, it is possible to understand Japan's Asiatic policy of the past few years. One may either approve or disapprove of it. From the Japanese viewpoint there was no choice. There was, of course, a choice as to methods to be used, and Japan used such methods as brought upon it the world's condemnation. It is too late for Japan to remedy this now. The Empire must face the disapproval of the world but equally, from the Japanese standpoint, Japan must continue upon its program for the control of northern China, Manchuria and eastern Siberia.

This most recent disturbance in Hopei Province has placed that vitally important section of the continent absolutely in Japanese hands, in the hands of the Japanese army for the time being, at least. Hopei remains an integral part of China, nominally under Chinese sovereignty, actually obedient to the dictates of the Japanese war office in Tokyo through its mouthpieces on the spot.

What more could Japan want? Possibly the erection of still another "independent" State, possibly the reunion of Hopei and Manchukuo under the sway of the now matured Boy Emperor of China, possibly the actual annexation of Hopei to the Japanese empire. All of these speculations are idle at the present moment, and none of them is practical at any time unless it be the restoration to the Dragon Throne of Hsuan Tung (rechristened Kang Teh as Emperor of Manchukuo) a matter on which American writers are fond of speculating.

But Japan has already what it needs in Hopei—actual although not overly visible power. There is good reason to believe that this was the objective in old Manchuria when the offensive there was first launched and that Manchuria would today remain nominally an integral part of China with Japan dictating behind the scenes had not the League of Nations intervened—and failed to hold up its intervention.

Camera Eyes.

M. LINCOLN SCHUSTER'S large, varied and lavish collection of photographs—"Eyes on the World: A Photographic Record of History in the Making" (Simon & Schuster, $3.75)—will hold most readers spell-bound from cover to cover, irritate some and puzzle others. The fascinated cohorts will be those who just like to look at pictures. The success of the several albums of war and horror photographs has paved the way for the all-conquering picture-book; there is no reason why others should not be done on any single, cohesive topic one might pick. For the great mass of people would rather look at pictures than read text, for the simple reason that the former makes no particular demands upon the brain.

You sit down and you look at Huey Long playing golf, or the U. S. S. Texas plowing through high seas, or Mr. Roosevelt addressing Congress, and you sense a somewhat vague but very self-flattering emotion of sharing in the life of the great world and of, somehow, understanding it. So there are hundreds of people who will enjoy this collection of political, personal and ideologistic protographs as much as they do the news reels. More, as a matter of fact, for I must give due credit to Mr. Schuster's high-minded attempt to keep the photographs significant and illuminating.

BUT though the editor and his staff realize, as witness the introduction, the inherent difficulty of presenting the trends and facets of current history through the camera eye, they do not realize it sufficiently. For, when all is said and done and the partisans of photography have developed their plates and mounted their prints, a photograph is almost entirely meaningless.

That is, its meaning is so broad and general that it all but means nothing whatever. Its idea may be strong and emotionally moving, as may the "idea" of music, but like music it can say nothing in particular. I ask you only to notice that there has not been a photograph, yet which could not adequately be captioned by a single word—"Hate," "Pride," Bombast," etc. Now that is all very well within its own field—one does not, after all, ask music to narrate a novel—but in a world which is somewhat more complicated than "one-word captions" can indicate, it does seem rather futile to ask that photographs clarify, illuminate and integrate history. A photograph of Hitler will show that he is proud; another of men strung up against a German wall will show that Germany is cruel, and I can not think that that sort of thing means any great shakes of understanding at all.

• • • •

NO, what this book does is to underline history, to sharpen emotionally our feelings toward some of the great generalities such as war, poverty, dictatorships, diplomacy, and so forth. We understand perfectly, say, that Italian youth is being trained to military vain-glory, but to see the superbly haughty look and deliciously stubborn knee of this little Italian boy marching along with his fellows is to feel young pomp with a fine immediacy. And as for horror, the battered face of a strike-breaking cop or the corpse of Dillinger isn't in it with the most terrific page in the book—merely a picture, at the top, of a soldier snagged and dead amid the barbed wire of No Man's Land, and below a scene of little uniformed English boys crawling under barbed wire in their war games, and one little tyke as blithe and chipper as you please smiling at the camera as if to say: "By jove, this is prime fun!"

The photographs and composite montages of this book are like posters, smashing through with an emotional emphasis on the great old facts of the world. But it is still possible to realize that the photographs explain nothing, to be irritated by the occasionally flip captions and the technically poor montage work, and yet find this gallant attempt exciting from cover to cover.

Citizens to Seek Ban on Fireworks

Early Celebrations Ire Hagerstown.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., July 2.—Citizens are preparing to appear before the mayor and city council Friday night to demand that firecrackers and all fireworks sales be banned in Hagerstown following injuries to two persons last night and the fining of five York, Pa., youths found guilty of hurling torpedoes.

Throughout yesterday and last night the police had been besieged with complaints of premature celebrations. Fred M. White, a member of the board of trustees of Bellevue, was struck on the arm by a stone from a large torpedo thrown at his feet as he was walking along the street in the downtown section with Elias B. Hartle, local attorney. White was treated at the Washington County Hospital. Miss Catherine Rider, 18, required medical attention when a stone from a torpedo tossed from a passing automobile struck her on the leg.

Five men found guilty of disorderly conduct in the attack upon White were fined $5 each by Magistrate John D. Dunn, who warned that future violators would receive jail sentences. Hagerstown has an ordinance which permits the sale of firecrackers from July 1 to 4, but the law does not permit firing of these except on July 4.

Newspapers In France

By

Wm. Lyon Phelps.

I AM a great reader of newspapers, as every one should be. I subscribe to all the daily papers of my home town. In addition I take four daily papers from New York. When I travel through remoter parts of the United States, if the train stops five minutes I skip out and buy a copy of the local newspaper, to see what kind of material is furnished to the inhabitants.

In Paris, of course, I read every day the Paris New York Herald. It tells me what is going on in America; it holds the American residents of Paris together; it is ably edited and directed.

Besides the regular Paris dailies, Le Matin, Le Temps, Figaro, etc., there are two newspapers, published every day, including Sunday, in Paris, the like of which I have seen in no other part of the world. One is devoted exclusively to the theater and kindred arts. The other is devoted exclusively to athletics.

• • • •

These are both full-sized newspapers, running often to 12 and more pages. The theater journal is called Comoedia. I read it in Paris faithfully every day. Besides containing a list of all the theaters, operas, movies, concerts, music halls, etc., it has authoritative articles on the drama, music, painting, sculpture, literature, written by experts.

At the close of a slightly ironical article on the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the death of Victor Hugo, saying that the Pantheon was not the best place to listen to oratory, it said that the real drama of the occasion was furnished by the presence of 3,000 little children; as each one deposited its bouquet of flowers at the shrine, the sophisticated Comoedia critic was not ashamed of his tears.

• • • •

The daily newspaper devoted to sport is called L'Auto, and it seems to find no difficulty in obtaining enough material to fill many pages in fine print every day. The French have gone mad over football; and the excitement of their games is heightened by the fact that so many of them are between the French and foreign teams; thus patriotic sentiment plays a leading part.

Here again the various games, from boxing to sprinting, are written by experts, whose style is often as subtle as if they were writing literary criticism.

Court of Appeals Holds Killer's Fate

Baltimorean Seeks Stay of Execution.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., July 2.—The State Court of Appeals tonight held the fate of Morris T. Utley, 29-year-old Baltimore man who killed another man in a store holdup there. Utley is now in death row at the Penitentiary in Baltimore, under sentence to be hanged. His appeal was argued before the court today. The high court has 90 days in which to file its opinion in the case.

Utley, former hospital orderly and the father of two children, was convicted of the murder of Charles F. Schimunek, who entered a chain grocery store in Baltimore during a robbery. The murder occurred last February 11, and on March 11 Utley was sentenced to death.

Mrs. Lupton Named Sole Heir.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., July 2.—Mrs. Victoria Noel Lupton was made the sole beneficiary under the will of her husband, Daniel Walker Lupton, admitted to probate here today. Mr. Lupton, an orchardist, died unexpectedly at Oberlin College, in Ohio, while visiting his daughter there.

Pawnbrokers File Reports.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., July 2.—Pawnbrokers began making daily written reports to local police yesterday under a new law applicable to Hagerstown, passed by the 1935 General Assembly. Police sought the law as a means of locating stolen goods.

"Mama," whispered little Willie as the great conductor took his place in the orchestra pit and the famous soprano began her aria, "what's the man shaking the stick at her for?"

"Shut up!" Mama explained. "That's his baton. He isn't shaking it at her."

"Then what's she hollerin' for?"

That, we are sad to report, is little Willie's reaction to good music. The case of his sister is even worse. She just loves to prattle about how much she adores good music, but when she has an opportunity to listen to a great symphony she stays home and tunes the radio to Cab Calloway's band. She thinks that arpeggio is an island in the Pacific and that Chaikovski was a Russian general. You see, little Willie and his sister have not read the excellent articles by Ray C. B. Brown in The Washington Post; and, therefore, are not en rapport with things musical. But there is hope for them even now, and we are starting a subscription to The Post for them in order that they may learn the intellectual pleasure to be derived from listening to classical music.

Mr. Brown is one of America's best known music critics, and his authoritative, intelligent, sensitive articles are required reading for music lovers. Washington is becoming more and more music conscious, and The Post is proud of the part Mr. Brown has played in explaining the works of great composers to new listeners. For two years he was managing editor of Musical America and his writings are studied closely by students. In his "Postlude" column, discussing the programs presented by symphony orchestras, choral groups and others, he strikes a new note in criticism.

Like his good friend, Dr. Sigmund Spaeth, the "tune detector," Mr. Brown can listen to Tin Pan Alley's latest song hit and tell you instantly the symphony from which the theme was stolen, and, if you question him closely, he might remember the older work from which the symphony composer borrowed a few bars!

In The Sunday Post you'll find an entire page devoted to music, and the leading article, always written by Mr. Brown, will give you a deeper, more sympathetic understanding of all things musical. Nowadays, when Stravinski's "Firebird" suite is discussed at the dinner table along with the New Deal and Europe's war scare, you'll find Ray C. B. Brown's brilliant articles of great help in convincing your hostess that you, too, can recognize Bloch's "Schelomo" and that you can discuss Hindemith with the best of them. If you are a lover of good music you'll appreciate his clear, authentic criticisms; if you are just learning to listen to the great symphonies you'll demand his help. You'll find it in

Night Clubs Still Popular In July Heat

Several of Dine-and-Dance Places Plan Treats for the Fourth.

By Chanticleer.

July and Washington's high humidity . . . should expect to find the Capital's dine-and-danceries dozing in the wake of a Western fire ball. Just a silly illusion. Even Monday, the national post-week-end relapse period, brings the people out this season. As a matter of fact, Monday is an excellent occasion for a night out among the folks.

Manhattan Promenade.

New York, July 2.

Battery Park, tiny bayside park tacked to the lowest tip of Manhattan Island, offers the most exciting panorama on a summer night. The benches in the park are the orchestra seats of a vast natural theater, with the waters of New York Harbor as the stage. Onstage, at all times during this free nightly show, is the most thrilling of American performers, the Statue of Liberty. Last night, standing flood-lighted on the purplish rug of ruffled harbor waters, she stood out with bold grace against the blue velvet backdrop of star-dusty sky. With the torch of white flame held above her head, it seemed as though she were straining to view the audience that sat on the benches of the darkened theater. They sat, most of them, peeled to their shirts, luxuriating in the breezes that danced at water's edge. Young lovers sat, hand in hand, whispering; a colored wife and husband bought peanuts for three little drowsy-eyed pickaninnies. The benches were hard, but preferable to the sultry heat that suffocated the tenements near by.

• • • •

It is a grand show that is staged nightly on the blue floor of the Harbor. The orchestra music, due to certain deficiencies, is bass and ear-shattering, for there are no wind instruments, only the horns of the ferryboats and excursion boats that bluster through the swells. They are both orchestra and ballet, these ferryboats, for once they have tooted their horns, they must don the ballet skirts and skip back and forth across the harbor in ballet formation. The stagehands are the tugboats, who snort protestingly as they tow the heavy harbor scenery. The electrician is the greatest in his field, the Man in the Moon. There are no ushers, no ticket takers, no Mickey Mouse short. There is only one feature picture, the Statue of Liberty, and it is such a box office draw that it hasn't been changed since 1886, and hasn't been wired for sound.

• • • •

Best approach to Battery Park, if you want to drop in on this free show some night, is the West Side Express Highway, the elevated roadway that runs from Seventy-second street, down town along the edge of the North River. From Fifty-seventh street, down, your car is only an arm's length from the piers of the ocean liners. You will see their names spelled out in Neon lights—the United States Line, the Cunard White Star, the North German Lloyd, the Italian Line, the French Line, the South American Lines. They seem to beckon the landlubber to the exciting ports of the world, to mystery and adventure Rio de Janiero, Havre, Hamburg, Buenos Aires, Galveston, Singapore, Naples, Cherbourg. I've never taken one of those ocean voyages. When I had the time to go, I didn't have enough money; when I've had enough money, I haven't had enough time. But every time I pass along the West Side Express Highway and see the names of these transatlantic lines, I feel as I felt when a kid at the circus, when the midway barker would point inside the tent and call: "Hurry, hurry, hurry, folks. Hurry, hurry, hurry."

What to say to a fallen gladiator? Leaving Leone's last night, after wrapping miles of delicious spaghetti, I ran smack into Primo Carnera. We shook hands. "You fought a darn good fight the other night, Preem," I said awkwardly. The giant screwed his face up into an expression of positive distaste. "Please, please, skeep it," he said. I tried again: "I'm not clowning, Preem—you don't have to feel badly about losing to Louis . . ." Carnera, his face flushing, put his huge hand over my mouth. "Please," he boomed. "Stop it, stop it." So we shook hands awkwardly, both of us flushed and uncomfortable.

Seat-hopping has become a positive art in the Broadway picture houses. You hop from one row to another, bettering your seat, and it is a lot of fun. At the huge, cylindrical-shaped Radio City Music Hall last night, I hung up what may well be a new American record. I advanced in three successive hops from the last row of the mezzanine to the second row of the mezzanine. The whole secret is deadly concentration. An expert seat-hopper, if you will pardon the boast, becomes so sensitive and finely attuned that he can tell when people are going to leave their seats a split fraction of a second after they make up their minds. By judging this precisely, you are able to rush down the aisle and arrive at the vacated seats even before they have a chance to cool off. The degree of heat left in the seat is really a degree of a seat-hopper's excellence. Last night's performance was the best I have ever given, although I've done fairly good work in the loge section of the Capitol, Paramount and Loew's State.

A girl from Ardsley, N. Y. sends me a Water Under the Bridge item, clipped from the August, 1885 issue of the Poughkeepsie Daily Eagle. Fifty years later it has significance. The caption reads: "Quick Ocean Trip," and under a New York date line, the Page 1 story continues: "The Steamer Normandie, from Havre, July 25, arrived at the bar today at 4 p. m. Deducting differences of longitude and three hours retarded speed on account of fog, her time was 7 days and 23 hours, the quickest passage on record." That was in 1885.

Women Voters Hear Aspirants In Arlington

H. J. Odenthal Says Sheriff Must Be Given Power of Police Chief.

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

Field day for political speeches marked the meeting yesterday of the Organized Woman Voters of Arlington County at Virginia Highlands when candidates for county offices spoke.

H. J. Odenthal, candidate for the sheriff's office, declared that the political situation in the county must change if Arlington is to progress. The sheriff must really be a chief of police, he said.

Odenthal said that Sheriff Howard B. Fields, running for re-election, had not cooperated with the county manager or the fire departments. Odenthal also declared that the law forbids slot machines, yet they are in operation; that many robberies happen in the county but are not reported; and that the present law officers are not doing all they can to regulate beer places.

Speaking in his own behalf, Sheriff Fields said that slot machines may be licensed by the commissioner of revenue, and that the law which allowed the sheriff or Commonwealth's attorney to disapprove the application for license has been changed. He also stated that he had cooperated with the county manager and declared that he had always favored progressive measures in the county. He concluded his speech by saying that there is less crime and better law enforcement in Arlington County than in any other section within 100 miles.

Slot machine operation in the county has replaced the trash dumps as an issue in the campaign, Emery N. Hosmer, candidate for Commonwealth's attorney, said. He charged that the present Commonwealth's attorney, Lawrence Douglas, had been given an assistant by the county board, but that Douglas was devoting part of his time to private practice.

Answering the Hosmer speech, Douglas asked his opponent to cite one case which had not been properly prosecuted. He accused Hosmer of dealing in generalities, and pointed to the new slot machine law as a reason for their prevalence.

John Paul Jones, also a candidate for Commonwealth's attorney, was the final speaker. He said that Douglas was running on the record he had made in the past, and that Hosmer was running on Douglas' mistakes. He denied that he was running for the office only to split the vote, and said he had a private law practice paying more than the elective job did. However, he declared, he did want the job and the confidence it implied. He promised, also, an intensive war on slot machines if he were elected.

Mrs. Jesse Roberts, president of the woman voters, said that two other meetings would be held later to hear candidates for other offices. The times and places will be announced later.

Another campaign meeting will be held tonight at the Odd Fellows' Hall in Clarendon, under the auspices of all the Democratic clubs in Arlington County. Candidates for county clerk, treasurer, and sheriff will be the speakers.

With playgrounds in operation for the first time under the supervision of the county school board and county board, William A. Richardson, director of the activities, last night reported that the enrollment has exceeded the 700 mark for the first two days. Indications are, he says, that next week will see more than 1,000 children of the county taking advantage of the playgrounds now in operation at most of the schools.

He reports that the large tract of land at Hatfield, which has been donated to the county school board as a playground by its owner, Joseph McDonnell, will be cleared and used as a baseball field. The plan, he explained, is to organize teams at each of the playgrounds and play games on this field.

Plans now are underway for a county-wide tennis tournament among the children attending the playgrounds. Richardson says this will be staged at the Washington Lee High School.

Miss Ann Hedrick, member of the Arlington County bar and sister of County Judge B. M. Hedrick, was named yesterday by Judge Hedrick to substitute for both him and his assistant, Clarence R. Ahalt, during their absence from the county.

The weekly luncheon meeting of the Arlington Kiwanis Club will be held today at 12 o'clock at the Washington Golf and Country Club. The usual meeting hour is 12:30.

Mrs. Isabelle Simpson, president of the Arlington County Woman's Democratic Club, announces the following committee appointments, together with the chairman in each precinct:

Membership—Mrs. Marguerite Baughman; publicity, Mrs. Isabelle Davis; program, Mrs. Clara E. Nevin, and ways and means, Mrs. Mary Mackey.

Precinct chairmen—Clarendon Precinct No. 1, Mrs. Mary P. Snyder; Clarendon Precinct No. 2, Mrs. Sara E. Foulk Is Appointed Manager Of Montgomery Liquor Board

Takoma Park Resident Will Assume Office on Friday.

Montgomery County Bureau of The Post, 1111 Oak Ave., Silver Spring, Md. Telephone Shepherd 2363.

J. Oscar Foulk, of Takoma Park, was appointed manager and treasurer of the Montgomery County Liquor Control Board yesterday by the county commissioners. He succeeds James P. B. Veirs, of Rockville, who resigned before taking office because of the pressure of private business.

Veirs was to succeed James C. Walker, of Chevy Chase, who had been manager since the inception of the county dispensary system in December, 1933. Walker resigned at expiration of his term, but remained to manage the affairs of the board until June 30. Foulk will assume office Friday.

Tax Fund Drop Blamed in Rise At Mt. Rainier

Decrease in Road, Gasoline Cash Share Held Basis of Increase.

Decrease in allocations from county road tax and State gasoline tax funds, and delay in receiving the funds has been declared the basis for the increase of municipal taxes in Mount Rainier.

In a statement approved by town officials Monday night, it was said the town, which formerly received about $8,000 from the county road tax, receives approximately $5,000 under the gasoline tax law.

The statement, which will be sent to every taxpayer, declared that "prior to the year 1933 the county levied 20 cents on each $100 assessed valuation of all real and personal property in Prince Georges County, to be used for county roads and bridges.

"Three-fourths of all the money collected for the county roads and bridges on property in the town of Mount Rainier was rebated to the town." This amounted to about $8,000 a year.

The statement also said that "at the January session of the 1933 (State Legislature), by an act approved April 21, 1933, the State Legislature, in order to relieve the taxpayers, passed an act providing a portion of the gasoline tax fund for maintenance of county roads, town streets and debts service."

It points out that no money was available for the town until after a portion of the gasoline tax for the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1933, had been collected, "with the result that the town could not receive any of the gasoline taxes until the calendar year 1934," the statement said.

Because the State had provided by its act funds for the maintenance of county roads and bridges, the county commissioners made no levy for such purposes in 1933, and there was therefore no rebate due to the town from the county road tax.

County Relief Costs $206,951

Stowaway, 7, Back From Trip, Likes Hard Life Before Mast

Experiences before the mast at the age of 7 made a favorable impression on Raymond Marsh, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy B. Marsh, of Alexandria, Va., who returned home yesterday after a stowaway trip on the Norfolk boat.

It was such a fine voyage that the 7-year-old is planning to take up a sailor's life. He hopes to join the Navy and "see the world."

The boy was missed from his home Sunday night. His parents did not learn where he was until news came Monday from Norfolk that he had arrived there by steamer.

When officers discovered him on board about an hour after the boat left Alexandria Sunday, they provided him with some nautical entertainment and education. He liked it so well he wanted to make the return trip with them.

But fate decreed otherwise. His parents drove to Norfolk and brought him back in the family automobile.

Raymond said he just walked to the wharf and went up the gangplank with the passengers who were going aboard. It was indicated he left home with the specific purpose of voyaging, for he had asked his older brother about the river ships before his departure.

Discovering America

With Maxine Davis

Rehabilitation of Destitute Farm Family in North Carolina Reveals Epic of Courage.

Maxine Davis, magazine and feature writer, has gone forth to discover the America of 1935. She will write of her experiences for The Post. Her second article appears today.

Winston-Salem, N. C., July 2.—Something tightens in your throat when you meet the Oscar Primms, but your heart beats high.

The Primms are a "rural rehabilitation family." Their history is too common to be interesting in these parts. Farmers, with eight children, they were stranded on this city's relief rolls. They wanted to get back to the soil.

So Minnie Williams, the little red-headed farmer, competent as she is determined, who supervises the rural rehabilitation program down here, got them a farm. Tenantless these ten years, overgrown and remote, it looked like the Promised Land to the Primms. When she got them a mule and a cow, a couple of hogs and 100 day-old chicks and only the most essential farm implements, they were all set to force it to flow with milk and honey.

The Primms moved out last February. When I visited them yesterday, way back in the Carolina hills, I felt as if I were visiting a Pilgrim home after its first Thanksgiving Day.

We drove past broadening tobacco, past clean rows of corn, then tomatoes in bloom. We walked up a little mud pathway edged with round rocks painstakingly matched.

Mrs. Primm paddled down to greet us, brown face gleaming like a glaced cooky. She was barefooted and fat. But one look at her and I wasn't surprised to see a dubious white puppy wagging excitedly behind her, and around the house the hope of a garden—one dahlia doing well, the smile of some scrubby verbena and a rosebush, scrawny, but ambitious.

The house itself looked as if it would collapse of weariness at any moment. Its windows are set at crazy angles. But within it was clean enough to satisfy the most carping Vermont housewife. True, there wasn't much to dust. The living room had a bed, a couple of chairs, and a chest. And one decoration—one of those glittering frosted sort of pictures of a house in the snow, a sleigh before it, and the legend, "Home, Sweet Home."

Mrs. Primm isn't talkative. But, pridefully, she took us to see her storeroom stocked with some 40 quarts of her own dewberries and her first cucumbers.

Then Primm came in, a stocky man with a Lincolnesque head and a straight, clear look in his eyes. He'd just finished building a wagon with lumber he sawed and some old wheels "Mr. Cleary says I kin borrow fer a while."

They'll make out. They hated relief. They've only had $50 worth of groceries since they came out. You can picture the place in two or three years; house and barns orderly, windows curtained, children shod. True, it will take the combined efforts of the whole family, mother, father and the eight youngsters working in the fields to do it. They'd scoff at agitation against child labor.

Like the others put back on the land this year under this program, they have 3 or 4 acres in "cash crop"—tobacco. They ought to get about $550 for that. A quarter of it will go for rent. Ten or 15 acres are in corn, 6 acres in wheat, 2 or 3 in garden vegetables, half an acre in cane for sorghum, and 2 or 3 acres of peas. What with their hogs and chickens, the Primms will have to buy only sugar and salt and coffee and a little fresh meat this winter. They have five years to pay for their capital goods, and if they want to buy their farm, they can have 30 years to pay for it.

The Primms are not exactly representative. Few families are as sturdy. Not every family has had their luck, either. I heard some hard-luck stories. Roy Webster, so happy to be off relief he worked as if he were quintuplets. The other night, just as he was ready to set out his tobacco, his right arm became paralyzed. Today Mrs. Williams is hunting anxiously for a relief man to help him out. She's not having an easy time because relief workers are supposed to labor only eight hours a day, and you can't punch a time clock on a red clay tobacco field.

Jake Torrey, her neighbor, was mourning his lost chickens. Someone stole every cheeping leghorn! Uncle Abe Marsh's mule died, a major calamity.

Not all the women know how to can. Far from it. A nutrition expert will come out presently and teach them. Nor do they see the point to the diversified crop. Mrs. Williams gives one-syllable lectures on the virtues of carrots.

Not all the families will make good. But there's hope in this program. It's worth while to re-establish the Primms.

Lloyd George Demands Curb On Financiers

Ex-Premier, Returning to Politics, Sees Problem Like That in U. S.

By the Associated Press.

London, July 2.—David Lloyd George, wartime prime minister, today cited "powerful interests" fighting the Roosevelt New Deal as illustrative of the kind of opposition his own "new deal" must face in Britain.

Addressing the Council of Action for Peace and Reconstruction, the little 72-year-old "Welsh wizard" marked his "reluctant" return to the political wars by saying:

"As far as I am concerned I mean to go on with it."

"The interests against us are very powerful," Lloyd George told his cheering audience.

"They are fighting Roosevelt in America now because he is trying to emancipate the country from the grip of high finance.

"You will find exactly the same interests here, and unless we organize counter pressure, they will triumph here as they have done elsewhere."

Warning the delegates "not to underrate what we can accomplish," the British new deal advocate said: "It is wonderful what a number of resolute men who mean business and who are not afraid of trying unaccustomed paths can achieve. History is full of such examples and we mean to add another."

"I have been pressed for some time, especially by a considerable number of people who are disillusioned by all parties, to come back into active life," the war leader said.

Calling for determined effort to restore "peace and prosperity," Lloyd George said his non-partisan council would put to every candidate in the forthcoming general election "questions the answers to which no man of honor can escape."

If the answers are satisfactory, he said, "we must support them without reference to any party consideration."

The war premier, reviewing prospects for peace in Europe, said "it seems to me the situation from the view of peace is in many respects worse than before 1914. Then everybody, as now, was talking about peace but everyone, just as now, was preparing feverishly for war."

Armaments are mounting, the little Welshman said, and "it's no use passing resolutions. It's no use calling conventions. You must act."

Post-Staunton Tuition Contest To End Aug. 1

Winner of Scholarship Will Spend 2 Years at Military School.

The closing date for The Washington Post-Staunton scholarship contest has been set for August 1. By that time, every boy competing must submit a letter on "Why I Would Like to Go to Staunton." The judges will read those letters carefully; they will study the scholarship records of the winners, and they will interview personally the contestants who seem most worthy of the prize.

The winner will be the happiest boy in Washington, for he will look forward to two glamorous years at Staunton Military Academy, where he will gain an education that will prepare him for any walk in life, amid surroundings as fine as any secondary school in the country can provide.

Sports Are Provided.

In athletics, for instance, a boy does not have to be a headliner to enjoy a sport. The Staunton athletic policy is that the sport is for the boy, and that the sport must be for every boy placed in the school's care. For two hours every week day afternoon, each cadet who is not competing in varsity athletics or who is not attending extra help classes, is engaged in some form of inter-company athletics. The three gymnasiums and athletic fields, the completeness of the equipment and the highly specialized coaching staff offer inspiration and guidance to the enthusiasm of the American boy for sports.

Some Washington boy is going to enjoy the sports, the companionship of other boys from all over the Nation who are attracted to Staunton, and the benefit of an education that will fill his personal needs, as the result of The Post scholarship contest.

Rules of Eligibility.

To be eligible, a boy must be the son of a veteran of the World War; he must live in the District, or must be the son of a member of a Legion Post in the District department, and he must be ready for the junior year at Staunton in the fall. There all his expenses will be paid for two years, his tuition, board, uniforms and other expenses provided for him.

Any boy who is eligible should write at once for an application blank and a Staunton catalogue from which he can write the required letter on "Why I Would Like to Go to Staunton." There is still time to enter the contest; the boy who enters today may be the fortunate winner. All communications should be addressed to Alice Fox Pitts, Staunton Scholarship Director, in care of The Washington Post.

Mme. Gruitch Establishes Camp for Slav Orphans

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Capital society remembers the charming Mme. Gruitch, American-born wife of the first Minister of Yugoslavia to Washington, who spent the years of her husband's period of duty here, and who was a most popular hostess. Mme. Gruitch and her husband now make their home in Belgrade, and the former visits this country once in a while, and is always royally welcomed to Washington.

Now from Yugoslavia comes the story of a summer camp which Mme. Gruitch has established for Yugoslav orphans near Selce. Young King Peter of Yugoslavia has joined the summer camp, and tired of his endless round of studies and military training which are designed to fit the 11-year-old monarch to become a sovereign, is enjoying the vacation with hundreds of the poor children of his people.

Enthusiastic Fisherman.

Like his late father, King Peter is an enthusiastic fisherman, and so he cooks all the fish he catches, and holds the record among the boys of the camp for the greatest number of fish caught.

The young sovereign has learned to sing American national songs along with the other boys at the orphanage which was founded 12 years ago as a memorial to those Americans who served Serbia's wounded soldiers in the World War.

The general world depression has forced Mme. Gruitch to seek assistance from the Yugoslav people for what she says is in fact an American war memorial. The American committee for the home is headed by Hamilton Fish Armstrong, of New York.

Mme. Gruitch a West Virginian.

Mme. Gruitch's husband, who is marshal of the Royal Court of Belgrade, was undersecretary of state for foreign affairs at Belgrade, and received the Austrian ultimatum which started the great war. He has been retired from the diplomatic service for some years, and since then has assisted Mme. Gruitch in her work at the camp.

The last time Mme. Gruitch, who was born in Clarksburg, W. Va., came to visit in this country, she was the guest of Mrs. Sidney Cloman and also of Mrs. John Allen Dougherty, who received a recent letter from Mme. Gruitch telling her of the presence of the young King Peter at the camp. On his arrival Peter planted a number of trees around the orphanage, which is situated on the shore of the clear blue waters of the Adriatic. His greatest joy is to visit the American and foreign battleships which frequently put in at the port.

Dorothy Dial, Daughter Of Former Senator, Wed

Marriage to Harold Ogden Smith, Jr., Is Solemnized at Washington Heights Presbyterian Church.

A smart nuptial event of the season was the marriage yesterday of Miss Dorothy Dial, daughter of the former Senator Nathaniel Barksdale Dial, of South Carolina, and Mrs. Dial, and Mr. Harold Ogden Smith, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Ogden Smith, of Philadelphia, Pa. White lilies against a background of palms and ferns decorated the Washington Heights Presbyterian Church, where the ceremony was performed by the Rev. John C. Palmer, D. D.

Filmy, ivory-tinted lace and tulle formed the bride's dress, fashioned with a long round neck which was edged with a narrow fluting of tulle and long slim fitting sleeves. The bodice of the gown was embroidered in tiny pearls and the skirt was formed of graduating ruffles from waist to hem. With it she wore a veil of tulle which was apliqued with designs of the lace and which was arranged in a cap effect with tiny orange blossoms. Her bridal bouquet was of lilies of the valley.

Attendants Wore Lilac Silk.

Attending the bride were Mrs. Matthew White Perry, her sister, and Mrs. Knox Johnstone, a sister of the bridegroom, who wore delightful models of lilac silk net, made with fitted bodices and large puffed sleeves. The frocks were trimmed with tiny buttons. The attendants' hats were of lilac tulle with short veils and they carried bouquets of orchid and pink delphinium. Mr. Knox Johnstone acted as best man for the bridegroom and the ushers were Dr. Matthew White Perry, Mr. A. Smith Bowman, jr., Mr. Charles Alfred Lawton, Mr. John R. Minter, Mr. Frederick D. Suttenfield and Mr. E. Maxwell Stone, of Lynchburg, Va.

Mrs. Dial, wearing a gown of flowered chiffon with a large black hat and a corsage of gardenias, assisted the young couple in receiving their guests at the reception which followed the ceremony. The reception was held in the drawing rooms of the Dial home on Kalorama road. The mother of the bridegroom, who also assisted in receiving, wore a handsome model of black sheer crepe with a wide black straw hat and a corsage of gardenias. White roses formed the centerpiece for the serving table. The drawing rooms were decorated with a profusion of summer flowers in pastel shades. Among the out-of-town guests were Mrs. William S. Carroll, of Charlottesville, Va., grandmother of the bridegroom, and Mrs. Daniel W. Layman and Mrs. Josephine S. Moore, of Indianapolis.

Will Take Extended Trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith left after the reception for a several months' wedding trip. The bride's traveling costume was a suit of navy blue sheer crepe with trimmings of yellow grosgrain ribbon and a boutonniere of yellow buttercups. A yellow suede beret and yellow gloves complete the ensemble. They will reside in Washington on their return.

The bride is a great-niece of Maj. Gen. Stephen Dodson Ramseur and a descendant of Lord Hastings. The bridegroom's mother was formerly Miss Elizabeth Carroll, of Lynchburg, Va., and is a descendant of the Finley and Rochester families of Kentucky. Skin Cleanser New Blessing For Hot Days

By Ruth Anne Davis.

THESE clammy hot days, how would you like to have a skin that felt fresh as new-mown hay that had the satiny softness of rose petals? And was as cool and clean as a mountain stream?

Don't laugh and say "Impossible." Don't say you've tried for the last ten years. And don't, above all, say you've no faith in skin treatments. You see, so many women try, day in and day out, patting this or that into the pores, experimenting with every new lotion or cream that appears. Naturally this doesn't pay. One has to be just as practical about cultivating a lovely skin as about curing the measles. In the first place, use only tried and true preparations. Don't go in for quantity. Make it your maxim to stick to quality. Have patience and don't expect miracles but at the same time expect results—and get them.

Our find of the summer season is a new product which is making its debut in Washington. There's nothing suspicious about it. There's nothing miraculous.

You'll learn things from it, too. Use it once and you'll find out just how much dirt and dust actually coat your face. You'll be surprised. Every one always is. For even after you've scrubbed your face till it's literally aglow, you put a bit of this cleanser on a piece of cotton, rub this over your skin, and heavens, look at the dirt!

After you've cleansed your face with it you'll feel a slight tingling. This means the nerve ends are quickening the circulation and bringing fresh blood to relieve your sluggish skin.

The icy coolness of it gently contracts the pores and leaves the surface of the skin ready for make-up. Now you can fluff on your powder and pat on your rouge with the assurance that they aren't going to seep into the pores to enlarge and clog them.

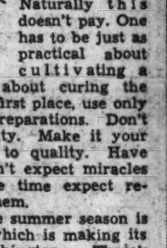
The delightful new product is not going to dry the skin. Don't worry about that. It has a normalizing effect that suits it as well to one face as another.

It comes to you already tested by a reliable bureau and lauded by thousands of women who are finding it simple, effective and convenient.

Travelers who loathe cramming their luggage with a small carload of jars and bottles turn to it eagerly as one thing that does the job of many others. Busy women find it a boon to relieve loaded hours. They can take time out to use it, whereas they might hesitate to begin an involved treatment that required first this, that and the other.

Pleasing the Hostess.

What person hasn't had difficulty deciding what to give her weekend hostess! The chances are she's dieting and might not welcome a tempting box of candy. Or she might be the motherly type who'd worry about the children being too prone to sugar plums. Flowers? Well, she lives in the suburbs, or the country and her garden is a riot of blooms. Besides, they'd be awkward to carry on the train or in the car.



You naturally want to take her something different. What a problem!

Why not let a certain beautician help you out of your quandary? She makes a specialty of attractive items that never fail to sweep you—or your hostess—off your feet.

She makes all kinds of suggestions, but one that is impossible to resist is an attractive box containing six miniature cakes of rosy soap. Dainty and convenient—and so useful!

Queen of Perfume.

The good ship Normandie came sailing into Washington this week and landed right on the counter of a downtown store. It had one passenger and that was a bottle of perfume placed right in between the brightly shining bow and stern like a somewhat oversized smoke stack.

Those who stop and gaze at this miniature queen of the seas cannot resist a sniff at the fragrant contents. And what a treat! Imagine all the gayety of Paris, plus the beauty of silver-crested waves, converted into a fragrance. That would be the perfume that this Normandie brings to Washington!

Rinse for Redheads.

Query: I have rather light brown hair which, due to my daily sunbaths, has a lot of reddish highlights. Friends tell me the effect is very flattering, so naturally I would like to accentuate it. Do you know of a good, harmless rinse I might use? H. L. W.

Answer: Why don't you try a vinegar rinse after your shampoos? This both cuts the soap and brings out reddish tints.

Call Ruth Anne Davis, of The Washington Post, National 4200, Extension 305, for further information, or write, inclosing stamped, addressed envelope.

Dr. Rathbun Has Written 150 Books on Crustaceans

Her zeal for crustacean research has caused Dr. Mary L. Rathbun to work without pay for 21 years in the Smithsonian Institution. The drawing is from a photograph by Underwood & Underwood.

By Emma Perley Lincoln.

IN THESE days when the world seems to eat, live and breathe in terms of cold cash, remunerative values and other materialistic beliefs, it is awe-inspring to hear of an individual so in earnest about her life work, that, for its furtherance, she has elected to labor without pay for 21 years.

In 1914, the work of the Division of Marine Invertebrates in the Smithsonian Institution had expanded to such an extent that Dr. Mary Rathbun, who had kept it going single-handed, since she joined the department in 1887, decided she must have an assistant.

She had only obtained the services of a secretary a couple of years previously. The idea of an added scientist assistant was out of the question. But the proper continuance of crustacean research demanded help, in Miss Rathbun's opinion, so she bethought herself of a willing young college student who had helped her in the summer of 1910, and who had been so competent that she determined to have him in the division at any cost.

Gives Up Place on Pay Roll.

The solution came when she resigned her job, so the one salary the department afforded could be used for the assistant. The fact that she is not on the pay roll has never made the slightest difference with Miss Rathbun's devotion' to' her work. She still comes to the office early each morning. Her one concession to the crowding years seems to be that she leaves in the afternoon as early as she likes, and instead of using the street car as she did for decades, she now rides back and forth in a relative's car.

The young man she brought into the department, a veteran of 21 years' service now, and a noted scientist in his own right, is properly appreciative of the privilege of being so closely associated during his career with the world's greatest authority on crustaceans.

"Her unselfish act in turning her salary over to me," Dr. Schmitt is fond of saying, "is characteristic of her genuine goodness and kindness of heart, and is a major contribution to science. Otherwise she could not have had the leisure to keep on with her research study, which is such a valuable asset to the information material available on this subject."

Miss Rathbun appears quite small in her lavendar smock, sitting before her great desk, surrounded by towering cabinets of specimens and trays of rare fossils. We are impressed suddenly with the wonder of how it must feel to have sat there for 55 years, while the world and its swift events moved on outside. We tried to realize that when she received her appointment to the Smithsonian that Chester Arthur was President, Victoria Queen of England.

Specimens Centuries Old.

"This," she says, showing a tiny white fossil as big as a thimble, "is Daira perlata (Herbst), from the Miocene Age." The scientific name comes as glibly from her lips as though she were mentioning a recipe for ginger bread. Her voice is soft and full and young. Her sense of humor shows in her twinkling eyes and ready smile. It's a mere 20,000,000 years old, she says, and was found in the far-away Fiji Islands.

Picking up a handsome specimen with two big crabs embeded in one formation, she explains that this happy family was caught where it stood "side by side in the ebbing tide," in the Eocene Age, 50,000,000 years ago, and was turned up on the coast of Florida.

The specimens overflow into labyrinths of rooms, where in stacks of shelves are bottles in which float the originals of 20,000 varieties of shrimps, crabs and their kinfolk, all assembled under Dr. Rathbun's supervision. There are, she told us, 6,000 varieties of crabs alone, and her research in the subject has covered crustaceans native to every spot on earth.

Dr. Rathbun's devotion to this science is traceable to the fact that her father owned stone quarries in New York State. Her brother, the late Dr. Richard Rathbun, was slated to carry on the business, but while working in the quarries, became so interested in the rare fossils which were constantly being unearthed, images of a past age, adroitly preserved in their beds of stone, that he took up the study seriously as his profession.

As a member of the United States Fish Commission staff, he went each summer to Woods Hole, Mass., for research and study. And with him one summer went his younger sister, Mary, and some of her classmates. The time spent on this delightful island with its picturesque coves and rocky shore, rich in scientific lore, proved the starting point in her career. She became so interested in crustaceans that from 1881 to 1887 she volunteered her services. In 1887 she was appointed to the Smithsonian Institution, where she began as assistant to the curator, Dr. Spencer M. Baird, working as a copyist.

Author of 150 Books.

Since that time she has written 150 books on her subject. Outstanding among these is "Fresh Water Crabs of the World," which she wrote in English for the Paris Museum, during a sojourn there, later translating it into French. The book, beautifully illustrated, is a famous work. Her latest work is a four-volume monograph of "Marine Crabs of North and South America" with the fourth volume nearly ready for the press.

Dr. Rathbun's fame among scientists was attested recently on the occasion of the seventy-fifth birthday party given her by the Smithsonian staff. The party was held in the Department of Commerce, where a long table was laid in the aquarium, the fish swimming in their brilliantly lighted tanks.

Season Is Here To Can Melons, Fruit, Berries

By Dorothea Duncan.

GET OUT the old preserving kettle and go to work. It seems like an imposition on your good nature even to suggest making jellies and preserves this hot weather, but when the time arrives you have to take advantage of it regardless of the mounting mercury.

Good watermelon are below 50 cents each and the price won't drop much lower, so first of all let's get busy and lay aside a good stock of watermelon pickles.

Pickled Watermelon Rind.

2 pounds watermelon rind
2 pounds sugar
1 pint vinegar
1 pint water
1 lemon, sliced thin
1 tablespoon cinnamon
1 teaspoon cloves
1 teaspoon allspice

Use only the white of the rind, taking care to remove all the red and the green. Soak the watermelon rind overnight in salt water (one-fourth cup salt to one quart water). Drain off the brine. Cook the watermelon rind in clear water until tender.

Make a hot pickling solution of the other ingredients, add the drained rind, and boil it rapidly until it becomes clear. The spices should be tied in bags and removed before the pickle is bottled. Seal it in clean, hot jars.

The same process may be used for green tomato slices.

Gooseberries are an old-fashioned luxury. They seem to be scarce in the city markets and stores, but plentiful for those who have their own garden patches. Recipes for gooseberry jellies and preserves, too, seem to have become almost extinct, so here are two for those fortunate few who know where to find gooseberries in abundance.

Gooseberry Preserves.

1¼ pounds sugar

Stem the berries, remove the blossom end and wash the fruit in cold water. (If berries are in perfect condition there is really little reason why you need waste valuable time removing the blossom end from each berry. The end will become soft after cooking and is not the slightest bit objectionable to the taste.) Half cover the gooseberries with water and scald the fruit until the skins are soft. Add the sugar to the hot mixture. Bring quickly to the boiling point and cook until clear. Seal at once in clean, hot jars.

Gooseberry Relish.

5 cups gooseberries
1½ cups raisins
1 onion
1 cup brown sugar
3 tablespoons mustard
3 tablespoons ginger
3 tablespoons salt
¼ teaspoon cayenne
1 teaspoon tumeric
1 quart vinegar

Pick over, wash and drain gooseberries. Add raisins (from which seeds have been removed) and onion, peeled and sliced. Chop or force through meat chopper, put in preserving kettle and add sugar, mustard, ginger, salt, cayenne and tumeric. Pour over vinegar, bring slowly to boiling point and simmer 45 minutes. Strain through a coarse sieve, fill sterile bottles with mixture and seal.

Blackberries and red and black raspberries are at their best now. The red raspberries and the blackberries are preferred for jam. These two fruits when overripe are lacking in pectin, the substance which permits the fruit to jell. It is better then when making blackberry or red raspberry jam to have the fruit underripe unless fruit pectin is to be added.

If you want your jam to be soft, tender and of a jelly like consistency, bright and sparkling and of the same consistency throughout the mixture follow these rules: Use underripe fruit, cook the fruit before adding the sugar, be sure that just the right amount of sugar is added for the quantity of fruit, cook the jam quickly and not too long, stir to prevent burning and seal in clean, hot jars.

Blackberry Jam.

Mash the berries, cook them in their own juice until they are thoroughly heated, then press them through a sieve to remove the seeds, which are objectionably large. Measure this pulp and liquid, and for every pint allow one cup of sugar. Add the sugar to pulp and cook rapidly until thick, stirring frequently. Pack in clean, hot jars and seal.

Raspberry and Currant Jam.

1 pound red raspberries
¼ cup currant juice
¾ pound sugar

Mash the fruit, add the currant juice and bring to the boiling point, stirring well from the bottom. Add the sugar and cook until thick, stirring occasionally. Pack in clean, hot jars and seal.

Sour red cherries are beginning to show up in the market, but they will be more plentiful and less expensive later in the week. Sour cherries and black raspberries together form a delicious conserve.

Cherry Conserve.

3 pints pitted sour cherries
1 pint black raspberries
2 2-3 cups sugar

Combine all the ingredients and cook until thick and clear. Put in clean, hot jars and seal.

For culinary assistance, call Dorothea Duncan, National 4200, or write to her, inclosing a stamped addressed envelope, in care of The Washington Post.

What TODAY Means

"Cancer."

IF JULY 3 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 11 a. m. to 1 p. m., from 3 to 5 p. m. and from 7 to 9 p. m. The danger periods are from 8 to 10 a. m., from 5 to 7 p. m. and from 9 to 11 p. m.

It will be advisable to follow any directions you receive this day. A disregard of any warning is liable to result in trouble. Obsolete methods used for handling commercial lines will likely prove expensive, where transportation facilities are involved. Money should be handled, as well as disbursed with care, to prevent losses through errors. Discrimination in issuing or accepting invitations of a social nature is advisable. Timidity in expressing a personal opinion will prove an error of judgment, so do not be afraid to answer questions which may be put to you, frankly. Married and engaged couples, as well as those absorbed in playing the game of hearts, will find any form of subterfuge a poor thing to try.

If a woman and July 3 is your birthday, while things of artistic merit probably appeal to you, your very practical mind is likely to keep you too busily absorbed in everyday affairs for you to devote very much attention to them. You are apt to be more interested in household or business duties than in social activities. Married life should have a far greater charm for you than the independence offered by a single career. You instinctively inspire confidence, so you are likely to be the repository of many a secret. Secretarial work, cashiering, bookkeeping, stenography, as well as work which will bring you into direct personal contact with the buying public, are among the vocational lines for which you are probably best fitted.

The child born on July 3, when it passes through the adolescent period usually displays a remarkable mental development, as well as a sudden realization of its responsibilities, which hitherto it may have been inclined to ignore.

If a man and July 3 is your natal day, if you will thankfully grasp the opportunities that are offered to you and make the best of them, instead of envying the good fortunes of others, the probability is you will find yourself just as successful. Chemistry, inventing, architecture, engineering, painting and salesmanship, are excellent mediums to be used in making money.

A Comfortable Ensemble That Is Adaptably Smart

Pattern No. 872.

SUMMER is playtime. And part of the fun is wearing the clothes. This smart little ensemble, for instance. It is such a complete change from everyday frocks, so comfortable, and so attractive in its own special way.

Without the jacket it is perfect for active sports or sunning on the beach. With the jacket, it is a completed costume to be worn on the many occasions for which a simple ensemble is suitable. This versatile design is easy to cut and sew, especially with the guidance of the large, illustrated instruction chart. The pattern is cut in sizes 12 to 38. Size 16 (34) requires 3⅜ yards of 35-inch material for the frock, and 1⅛ yards for the jacket.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

"Fed-Up" Not Alone in Her Dissatisfaction With Radio Programs.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Well, you certainly took a wallop at some of the punk radio announcers and radio programs Monday when you published that letter from "Fed-Up." Her letter inspires me to join forces with her and throw my gauntlet into the ring, to see if some reformation can not be effected in the "nitwit" type of morning program now being offered.

Now, I'm not a housewife, young, middle-aged, or oldish. I'm just the husband of a housewife, but I certainly appreciate the irritation which caused "Fed-Up" to burst into print with her protest.

• • • •

If some of these smart aleck ballyhoo windbags who make their living announcing over the air would lay off the "high-pressure" sales talks they might get a more generous public response to their invitations to try out the shaving lotions, bath soaps, salted peanuts, toothpastes, motor oils, grand pianos and burial caskets they advocate. I agree with "Fed-Up" that practically all the brands of merchandise advertised over the radio are on my blacklist.

• • • •

When I read "Fed-Up's" description of "the imbecilic comic generally heard on these cooking programs, who voices 'ohs' and 'ahs' at the slightest provocation over the 'scrumptuous' concoctions being 'whipped up,'" I was convinced I recognized a well-known local radio wit and offender.

• • • •

I won't mention any names in print, but I will say I have compiled a preferred list of radio offenders. And so I'm willing to do my part toward starting a Society for the Suppression of Radio Nitwits, Crackpots and Bores. I believe we'll have no trouble getting men to enroll, along with thousands of poor suffering housewives who have to perform their morning chores either in comparative solitude or to the accompaniment of a lot of claptrap radio ballyhoo.

• • • •

If we must take our morning radio music in the form of disk recordings, then let it be good recordings, with decent orchestras, piano and voice. I wish they'd let loose occasionally with a piece of real jazz, the clarinets screeching and the saxophones laughing and sobbing. Not more than one good jazz piece an hour, of course, but that one would give relish to a soothing melody to follow.

• • • •

Well, there you are, my dear Miss Haworth. I know that I express the sentiments of many of my own sex, age and class who are ready to go to bat with "Fed-Up" for more intelligent radio programs. My time is up, so "cheerio and more power to your pen." If you publish any part of this letter, just sign it

ESSAYER.

• • • •

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: The letter from "Fed-Up expresses my exact sentiment of distaste for the current type of radio program being offered for the so-called "entertainment" of housewives. I, too, refuse to buy products I might otherwise be tempted to try, just because of the radio salesmen's exaggerated claims for them. Good-speed to "Fed-Up's" efforts to change all this! MRS. G. M. J.

DEAR ESSAYER and MRS. G. M. J.: "Fed-Up" asked for "the reaction of readers to this question of better radio programs for housewives," and here she has it, at least, in part. No doubt she will be pleased to have such prompt indorsement of her complaint. However, there may be many who find much merit in the radio programs as they now exist. If so, it would be interesting to have their point of view. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

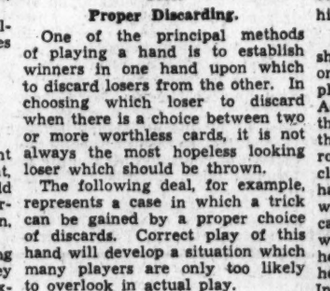
Proper Discarding.

One of the principal methods of playing a hand is to establish winners in one hand upon which to discard losers from the other. In choosing which loser to discard when there is a choice between two or more worthless cards, it is not always the most hopeless looking loser which should be thrown.

The following deal, for example, represents a case in which a trick can be gained by a proper choice of discards. Correct play of this hand will develop a situation which many players are only too likely to overlook in actual play.

East, Dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.



The bidding: (Figures after bids refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

East	South	West	North
Pass	Pass	Pass	1♣(1)
Pass	2♣(2)	Pass	3♣(3)
Pass	4♣(4)	Pass	Pass
Pass

1—Exactly enough for an opening bid. The requirements are the same in the fourth position as in any other position.

2—With two honor-tricks and a rebiddable major suit, South shows that he had a maximum pass and game is probable. The use of this forcing jump takeout by a player who has previously passed can not be misread, since the limit of his strength is always known to be below the 2½ to 3 honor-tricks necessary to open the bidding.

3—Despite his minimum hand, North responds to the forcing takeout.

4—Being assured North has support for spades, South unhesitatingly contracts for game in that suit.

West opened the King of diamonds, East played the three and South the four. South's reason for ducking was that he hoped to entice West to lead another diamond, which would permit his Jack to win the second round. But East discouraged a diamond continuation by his play of the three.

Warned by his partner that a shift was in order, West chose the only safe lead—a trump. Dummy played low and East won with the Ace and returned a diamond. On this South played the Ace and West the ten. South now drew two more rounds of trumps and attacked the club suit. After the three top clubs had been played, Dummy's last club was established and furnished a discard for one of South's losers. It would be a great error to throw the heart, taking the situation in both hearts and diamonds as identical. Instead, on the thirteenth club South discarded the Jack of diamonds. Now he led a diamond from Dummy and ruffed in his hand, and, since that suit was divided 3-3, the last diamond in Dummy was thereby established. It remained only for South to lead a heart to Dummy's Ace, whereupon the last two tricks were taken by the eight of diamonds and South's remaining trump. The result was five-odd in spades.

The extra trick gained by South was not particularly important because the game could have been made in any case. A valuable lesson, however, is taught by the actual playing technique employed by South.

Poison Ivy Remedies Suggested

After Exposure, Scrub Hands With Strong Laundry Soap.

Iron Chloride Is Useful Both as Preventive and Treatment.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

POISON IVY has long been known as a source of skin irritation, and that redoubtable warrior, Capt. John Smith, friend of Pocahontas, described in his "History of Virginia" (1624) the effects of the plant which he encountered in the woods along the James River. He wrote: "The poisonous weed, being in shape but little different from our English yvie; but being touched causeth redness, itchinge, and lastly blysters."

The plant is frequently mistaken for the Virginia creeper. The distinction, however, may be made by recalling that the harmless creeper possesses five leaflets, while poison ivy has but three. After contact with the plant, irritation often develops within a few hours.

The poison comes from the sap of the plant, which contains an irritating toxin and an extremely minute quantity adhering to the skin will bring on the symptoms. This may result from immediate contact with the plant itself or through some intermediate article such as gloves, stockings, or shoes. Many cases of ivy poisoning have been reported through contact of the bare hands with shoes or leggings that had been worn in ivy infested areas. Toxin on the hands may be carried to the face and other parts of the body.

Pain Sometimes Severe.

The symptoms are swelling, pain, and a general inflammatory reaction of the skin. The pain is sometimes quite severe.

After exposure it is well to scrub the hands thoroughly with strong laundry soap. This will remove a considerable portion of the toxin. A 5 per cent solution of iron (ferric) chloride is useful both as a preventive and in treatment.

When tramping through woods or brush it is well to wear gloves, and heavy boots and woolen stockings will protect the feet and legs. An antigen (neutralizing agent) has been prepared and may be used in particularly susceptible individuals as a preventive measure.

Ringworm, also known as athlete's foot or golfer's foot, is prone to spread if indoor swimming pools are utilized. The locker room of a country club is a favorite breeding ground of the fungus. The colorless, threadlike parasitic plant that causes the condition finds ready lodgment in the soft skin between the toes and around the nails, especially in the presence of a considerable amount of perspiration.

How to Prevent Infections.

Prevention is more important than cure, and it is easy to keep the fungus out of dressing rooms if the floors are occasionally washed with hypochlorite of lime. A tub of this solution will prevent infections if the feet are thoroughly washed with the chemical before entering the locker room. The best preventive is personal cleanliness of the feet, followed by the use of a dry dusting powder (equal parts boric acid, zinc oxide, and starch) before donning the shoes and stockings. This minimizes sweating and retards the growth of the fungus even if the infection is present. A recent suggestion of possible value has come from the caretaker of a well known pool, who paints the floor of the dressing room daily with a solution of calcium carbide. Quick lime should have the same effect.

The lesions may be positively identified by finding the parasite through microscopic examination of the softened, peeling skin.

There are a number of favorite remedies, but first in importance is cleanliness, scrubbing each area with soap and water. Tincture of iodine diluted to one-fifth its normal strength with alcohol may be applied two or three times daily. Ammoniated mercury is also used and a solution of sodium hyposulphite (the hypo used by the photographer) is of value.

Parade Members Rehearse Program of Celebration for Fourth.

Members of parading units and other featured participants were rehearsed in their paces last night at the Washington Monument as the city marked time for a gigantic celebration of the Fourth tomorrow night.

A crowd estimated at 100,000, equal to that of last year, is expected to be on hand to witness the patriotic exercises, a fact that caused committeemen in charge to knit their brows in worried anticipation. Only 8,000 seats on the sloping grounds of the Monument have been provided for spectators.

Senator Harry F. Byrd, of Virginia, has been announced as the principal speaker at the ceremonies. The invocation will be pronounced by the Rev. Arthur O'Leary, S. J., new president of Georgetown University.

Military, patriotic and veterans' organizations of the city will take part in the impressive "procession of colors" event, opening the program at 7:15 o'clock. A huge fireworks display will climax the exercises.

Meantime, many neighborhood celebrations have been planned throughout the day. Senator Bennett Champ Clark, of Missouri, is scheduled to speak during a program to be conducted in the amphitheater at Arlington by the Jewish War Veterans at 11 a. m.

C. Melvin Sharpe, prominent civic worker, will be the chairman in active charge of the evening celebration at the Monument. He will be aided by Mrs. Elizabeth K. Peeples, director of the District Community Center; James G. Yaden, Robert J. Cottrell, Frank R. Jelleff, Richard S. Tennyson, Edgar Morris and others.

The District chapter of the American Red Cross has volunteered the services of its first aid workers, scouts and nurses, and will place first aid stations at various points on the ground. Two ambulances will be pressed into service against the possibility of injuries to spectators.

The United States Marine Band will play throughout.

Special traffic regulations, as announced by Police Superintendent Ernest W. Brown and Park Police Capt. P. J. Carroll, will ban traffic after 6 o'clock on the south roadway, north of the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, in the area west of Fourteenth street.

Batting for Morgan Baker.

ATTEMPTING to obtain positions for dismissed employes of both old and new Federal agencies, an inter-lodge committee on Government personnel transfer has been set up by the local of the American Federation of Government Employes. Already 16 lodges are represented on this committee.

Arthur Stine, Division of Review, NRA, is chairman of the committee, which registers employes seeking transfers, from Monday to Friday, 5 to 6 p. m., room No. 529, Washington Loan & Trust Building.

The work of this committee has been indorsed by Secretary Harold I. Ickes, who will recommend its program to President Roosevelt, according to W. B. Drawbaugh, member of Weather Bureau Lodge, Local 23, A. F. G. E.

A circular issued by the committee states:

"The Government, like any other employer, is responsible for the welfare of its employes. A central transfer agency alone offers protection to employes dismissed through no fault of their own. The A. F. G. E., in convention assembled, voted for the establishment of such a transfer bureau. Defense of the merit system demands that jobs be filled on the basis of experience and service. The Government must protect its employes from the hardships of unemployment by establishing such an agency."

The committee has planned a conference at the Washington Hotel, July 9 at 8 p. m.

Malcolm Duffield has resigned his position with HOLC and is en route to Hollywood, where he expects to begin work on the screen. He has had extensive experience on the legitimate stage, both in New York and on the West Coast. Duffield has numerous friends in Hollywood, including Irene Castle and Sue Carrol.

FRANK SAMMONS (F), Secretary's office, agriculture, has been named chairman of the Community Association committee which has been set up in the Agriculture Department to foster a plan of home ownership among Federal employes.

The project was started several months ago and has materialized into a definite organization, designed to promote a community planning and building program for Government employes.

The following committees, known as the executive body, have been formed: Architects' plans and building costs, R. U. Bonnar, Foods and Drugs Division, chairman; business, finance and legal division, Roger Matteson, BAE, chairman; location and site planning, C. A. Ludwig, Chemistry and Soils Division, chairman; social relationship, Miss H. M. Albright (C), Secretary's office, chairman.

Committees have been designated to work with these chairmen and a final report of their findings will be submitted to the whole group. These committees will meet today at 4:45 p. m. in the Agriculture Building to discuss plans for carrying forward the program.

Several private development companies already are working on bids for planning a community project and building homes to be paid for by the Federal workers over a long-period amortization plan.

Plans for promoting a project of erecting apartments for Government employes also have been considered by the agriculture general committee on housing and rent. Means of financing this venture are being studied.

Many Government employes will scurry away to the seashore or to some inland watering place, celebrating the July 4 holiday. Others will flee from the city's heat and noise to the cooling breezes of some high-crested mountain resort. Thousands of these Federal workers have planned ahead for this Independence Day outing and day of freedom.

Retirement Hearing.

Representatives of Federal employe groups appeared at a hearing of the House Civil Service Committee on the Celler 30-year optional retirement bill yesterday and urged the liberalization of the Government retirement system.

Among those who appeared were E. Claude Babcock, president, A. F. G. E.; Robert Alcorn, chairman, conference on retirement, A. F. of L. affiliates; Luther C. Steward, president, N. F. F. E.; Ulrey J. Biller, vice president, N. F. F. E., and Gilbert E. Hyatt, president, National Federation of Postoffice Clerks.

Several members of the delegation supported the proposal to permit the extension of pensions to include widows of employes, or a second life as named by the employe.

Regent Head Quits, Stirs U. of M. Anew

Former Senator France Mentioned for Post at College Park.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, July 2.—Two of the highest posts in the administration of the University of Maryland were vacant tonight, in the wake of an announcement by George M. Shriver, chairman of the university's board of regents, that his resignation had been accepted by the Governor.

Following close on the requested resignation of Dr. Raymond A. Pearson, the institution's president, who was asked by the regents to vacate his position effective at noon yesterday, the board chairman's action threw affairs of the State school into new turmoil.

Shriver, senior vice president of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, released correspondence between himself and Gov. Harry W. Nice which indicated his resignation was submitted in a letter dated June 29—the day after the regents, in executive session here, asked the president to leave.

Strong Pearson Supporter.

The Governor formally accepted the regent's resignation "with the very greatest reluctance" in a letter received by the B. & O. executive today.

Shriver stated flatly his act had no connection with the board's ultimatum to Dr. Pearson, other than that settlement of the three months' controversy provided him with an "opportune" time to withdraw.

He said press of other duties made it impossible for him to carry on the chairmanship—a position he has held since the death of Samuel Shoemaker in 1933. Prior to that time, he was a member of the board for many years.

It is known, however, that Shriver, Henry Holzapfel, jr., and John M. Dennis were Dr. Pearson's strongest supporters in the investigation of the President's administration.

Pleads Other Duties.

In his letter to the Governor, enclosing his resignation, Shriver said:

"I am taking this action because I find it impossible to give to this important work the required time and attention with due regard to my other and more immediate duties.

"I would have taken this action earlier but for the fact that I preferred not to retire from the board until the controversial questions respecting administration matters were disposed of. Incidentally, I would say that I personally appreciated your position in that matter and recognized the propriety of your views as stated in your letter to me of June 27.

"Now that the board will be called upon to name a new president it has seemed to me important that the member you may select as my successor be appointed now in order that he may participate in any plans for reorganization. * * *"

Pearson Surprised.

He added that, although he did not know if the question of party affiliations would arise in the Governor's consideration, "in order to correct any possible misunderstanding," he was appointed to the board with the knowledge he was a Republican.

At his home in Hyattsville, Dr. Pearson was obviously surprised at the board chairman's action.

"That's a calamity," he said, "it's a serious blow to the university. Mr. Shriver is one of the most able, keen-minded, high-principled executives in this or any other State."

Although one high official at the university said he had been "expecting" such a move, the general attitude was one of surprise. H. C. Byrd, acting president of the institution, could not be reached.

Successor Due Soon.

Gov. Nice said in his letter accepting the resignation that he felt "the university has lost one of its real assets, and Maryland the services it can ill afford to lost. * * *"

"* * * I am hoping," he continued, "that before my term of office shall have expired I shall be able to persuade you to become a member of my administration in some capacity."

Asked when he would appoint Shriver's successor, the Governor said:

"I hope to make the appointment within a few days but I am not now in a position to discuss the identity of the person I shall ask to succeed Mr. Shriver."

Former United States Senator Joseph I. France is being mentioned as a possible successor to Dr. Raymond A. Pearson as president of the University of Maryland, The Post learned last night.

Friends of France, who was defeated for the Senate by George L. Radcliffe, point out he is an experienced educator, in addition to being a statesman, physician and experienced executive.

France is a trustee of the Jacob Tome Institute at Port Deposit, Md., where he makes his home. He has been interested in education many years.

France was a candidate for the Republican nomination for President in 1932. He is 62 years old.

Widow Clears Suspect Seized In Terry Death

Pruitt Not Slayer of Her Husband, She Tells Maryland Sheriff.

By the Associated Press.

Chestertown, Md., July 2.—William Pruitt, held in connection with the fatal stabbing of Kelly C. Terry, was cleared of implication in the crime late today by Mrs. Terry.

"That is not the man who killed my husband," she told Sheriff John W. Bennett during the funeral for Terry at his home near here.

Pruitt was returned here from the State police sub-station at Conowingo to view Terry's body before it was buried in Chester Cemetery. The sheriff explained that was his privilege under the law.

Resembles Wanted Man.

Sheriff Bennett pointed out that the similarity in the appearances of Pruitt and John Ellis, sought in the slaying, probably caused some of the witnesses to identify the prisoner as being at the dance at the time of the stabbing.

The sheriff, asserting "we are going to prevent any frame-up," said the "suddenness of the stabbing and the crowded condition made it difficult to make a perfect identification at the time we questioned witnesses."

State police continued their search for Ellis in Maryland and Pennsylvania. They visited his home in Chester, Pa., yesterday.

Four Brothers Held.

Four brothers, Luther, Alvin, Woodrow and Newton Downs, of Burrisville, were taken into custody.

Sheriff Bennett said the brothers "are being held as material witnesses since some admit taking Ellis back to Chester after the knifing.

Terry was buried in Chester Cemetery. His widow has been so ill since the stabbing that she has not been questioned at length.

Officials Study Wheat Situation

Federal Group to Watch Virginia Trends.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., July 2.—Federal agricultural officials in Washington have promised to watch the wheat situation in Virginia closely, George W. Koiner, State commissioner of agriculture, said today.

J. H. Meek, director of the division of markets of the Virginia Department, conferred with Washington officials yesterday on the grain market in the State, Koiner said.

Several farmers of the State have advised him they are planning to store their wheat, Koiner said, adding that he was in favor of a cooperative storage plan if individual growers could not provide their own facilities for holding the grain for higher prices.

Envoy Lauds Cuban Policy Of New Deal

'Good Neighbor' Dealing Boon to Island, Welles Tells Institute.

Jobs for All Hinge on Sound U. S. Program, Bell Asserts.

By the Associated Press.

University, Va., July 2.—The economic progress of Cuba since the adoption of a new trade agreement with the United States was cited as a shining example of the accomplishments of President Roosevelt's "good neighbor" policy in the Caribbean by Sumner Welles, Assistant Secretary of State, in an address tonight before the University of Virginia Public Affairs Institute.

New treaties which the career diplomat predicted would be consummated soon with Haiti and Panama would, he said, go far toward further mollifying Central American countries estranged from the United States by the so-called "Coolidge doctrine" of armed intervention, such as was applied in the cases of Santo Domingo, Haiti and Nicaragua.

Prefacing his discussion of the present Administration's policy as compared with that which had prevailed previously, Mr. Welles said "it would seem to me that no impartial observer could maintain that the policy which has been carried out in the Caribbean during the last 50 years has resulted in benefits to the people of the United States."

Analysis of U. S. Wealth.

Welles' address was given as part of a program that also included an analysis of American wealth by William B. Bell, of New York, president of the American Cyanamid and Chemical Corporation, who told the institute audience that no man who wanted a job in America would be without one if business were permitted to begin upon a program which, he said, definitely offered some $85,000,000,000 of accumulated demand in durable goods.

"So long as we pursue economic policies which threaten the elimination of all profit, which strike at the rewards of energy, ambition and frugality, business necessarily hesitates, new projects wait, unemployment continues and social unrest increases. In America there has been no period of industrial activity during which any substantial measure of social unrest existed," he added.

Speaking on "How to Share the Wealth," Mr. Bell took up the proposals of Huey Long, Father Coughlin and Senator La Follette and gave figures which he said showed that if the wealth of the Nation were divided there would not be much in each share.

Argues for Social Security.

Prior to the evening program, at which Welles and Bell spoke, arguments favoring social security legislation were presented at an afternoon session by Dean Raymond B. Pinchbeck of Richmond University and Dr. Eveline M. Burns, of Columbia University.

"It is absurd to argue that the cost of social security legislation is too great," Dr. Pinchbeck insisted. "The Nation already is paying the cost of insecurity. The plan will not help in the present difficulties, but is for avoidance and amelioration of future crises by furnishing a system which will more equitably distribute the costs of unemployment, old age, dependency and sickness.

Dr. Burns contrasted the social security legislation passed in the United States with that of many European countries to show that this country is lagging behind. She criticized the bill passed by Congress as not covering nearly enough of those who will need benefits.

Road Official's Dismissal Case Rests to July 9

Court Raises Question of Right to Rule Upon Richards' Efficiency.

By the Associated Press.

Elkton, Md., July 2.—Argument on the bill of complaint filed by the Cecil County commissioners against the State roads commission over the dismissal of Joseph T. Richards was concluded today.

The case was continued to July 9, at which time briefs will be filed by both sides.

During the course of argument by attorneys, the court interrupted to raise the question if it had the right to pass on a man's efficiency when the State roads commission was given that authority by an act of the Legislature.

Case Hinges on This Point.

It is this point around which the case revolves. The county board based its complaint on the grounds that Richards was an efficient county roads supervisor, yet was dismissed from his job by the State roads commission.

The roads bureau, in rebuttal, asserted that "after valid investigation" it found Richards incompetent and inefficient. John C. Gray, special assistant attorney general, said the county commissioners have the right to recommend, but the roads department is given authority to decide who shall be county roads supervisor.

Maintenance Cost Cited.

In declaring Richards uneconomical, Gray pointed out that the cost of maintaining Cecil County roads under his supervision was $156.04 a mile, compared with $86.53 a mile in Caroline County, $130.32 in Queen Anne's and $146.60 in Talbot County.

Joshua 'Clayton and Henry A. Warburton, with Gray, formed the legal staff for the roads commission. The county board was represented by James F. Evans and Philip R. Bond.

Virginia Aid From U.S. Set At 31 Million

Total Includes Money Spent in State for CCC and PWA.

By the Associated Press.

Federal emergency relief funds sent into Virginia in the fiscal year ended June 30 totaled $15,937,804, a sum comparable with the State's general fund budget for the period.

This sum was exclusive of approximately $15,000,000 spent in the State by the Federal Government for the CCC, the PWA, which since July, 1933, has awarded loans and grants in the State totaling $10,760,320, and under other Federal programs.

The general fund of the State usually runs around $16,000,000 a year, exclusive of the highway fund and other special fund items which go to make up an annual budget of approximately $40,000,000 a year.

Breaking down the allotments which went to theOld Dominion in the 1934-35 year from the emergency relief administration bank roll, the administration yesterday compiled the following figures: General relief, $10,167,194; transient care, $941,000; Fort Eustis Transient Camp, $586,217; education program, $636,094; student aid, $270,351; rural rehabilitation, $1,585,000; self-help (the Richmond relief co-operative), $31,200; relief research, $5,490; potato surplus, $750,000; Federal surplus relief, $425,000; cattle purchases, $495,652; cotton purchases, $32,136; social workers' training, $12,470.

The administration explained items for transient care and the Fort Eustis Transient Camp were listed separately because the camp had been conducted for persons from outside of Virginia, as well as those in the State.

Winchester, Va., July 2.—Homer Moreland, of Glengary, W. Va., father of 7-year-old Louise Moreland, who was critically injured in an automobile accident Sunday near Greenspring, surrendered today to Frederick County officers who are holding him for investigation.

According to reports which officers are seeking to verify, Moreland and a companion left Moreland's wife and child at the scene of the accident, the latter suffering from a fractured skull. Moreland today told officers he was not driving the car when it left the highway and plunged over an embankment.

Although doctors have despaired of the child's recovery she was slightly improved today.

West Virginia Trucks Halted By Maryland in License 'War'

Other States Threaten Reprisals Against New Tag Law.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hancock, Md., July 2.—A "truck license war" waged between Maryland and West Virginia, went into full swing along the Potomac here today as Maryland State police were stationed at the three bridges that span the river at Williamsport, Hancock and Shepherdstown to prevent unlicensed West Virginia trucks from entering the State.

Today's action of Maryland officials was explained as being in reprisal of West Virginia's new trucking law, requiring all out-of-State "for hire" trucks to carry West Virginia permits. The permits range in price from $20 for ton trucks to hundreds of dollars for larger conveyances.

Police explained that no drastic action will be taken against offenders, but that they would not be permitted to enter. Trucks bearing unprocessed farm and orchard produce are exempted by both factions.

Although Maryland is first to combat West Virginia's new edict, Virginia, Pennsylvania and North Carolina road commissions have served notice on West Virginia that enforcement of the new law on trucks from their States will result in similar treatment of West Virginia trucks.

Also voicing disapproval, the Virginia Horticultural Society has taken the matter up with Gov. Kump and Road Commissioner Baily, of West Virginia. Commissioner Baily has replied that the law "was on the books," and that there was no way of arranging abrogation at the present time.

Witness Dead, Town Loses Rail Station

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, July 2.—When a dead man failed to appear as a witness at a hearing here today, the Pennsylvania Railroad won the right to change Costen, Somerset County, from an agency to a non-agency station.

The proposal to make the change was first entered with the public service commission a dozen years ago and at that time L. C. Quinn, Eastern Shore businessman, protested. Quinn died several years ago.

The railroad recently asked that the case be revived. In order to do so, Quinn had to be listed as the opponent, although both the commission and the railroad knew he was dead.

Eastern Shore Potato Strike Ordered Again

Group Bans All Shipments Today, Finding Truckers Are 'Chiseling.'

By the Associated Press.

Painter, Va., July 2.—Resumption of the potato marketing "holiday" on Virginia's Eastern Shore tomorrow was ordered this afternoon by the executive committee empowered by the growers to make and enforce regulations of the crop movement.

Airtight restrictions were applied again abruptly just as the producers had relaxed their ban on exports and permitted shipments for which the mandatory code of prices was paid.

Without explaining fully the reasons for the reversal of policy, Milton T. Hickman, secretary of the six-man committee, said Wednesday would be a "full holiday" for shipments by truck, rail or water.

The announcement came soon after farmer pickets had turned their attention on truck operators who had aroused the growers' ire by alleged "chiseling" on the $2 a barrel base price achieved by the Eastern Shoremen in their drastic strike against low prices.

The growers' squad at the Maryland line was alert to turn back truckers who could not prove that the cargoes they carried were being handled at prices equal to the freight carload rate.

Receipts Tax Appeal Made In Maryland

High Court in Session on Relief Fund Levy, Held Legal.

State, 4 Complainant Merchants, Present Arguments.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., July 2.—Maryland's 1 per cent gross receipts tax, the State's only means of providing revenue for relief needs, was submitted to the Court of Appeals today for a decision as to its constitutionality.

Judge J. Frank Supplee, jr., in Circuit Court No. 2 of Baltimore City, already has held the tax constitutional. Complainants in the action, four merchants, took the case to the Court of Appeals.

Attorney General Herbert R. O'Conor and Assistant Attorney General William L. Henderson argued for the State and Randolph Barton and Morris Rosenberg for the complainants.

State's Argument.

Major points presented in the State's brief included:

That the 1935 Legislature, which enacted the tax, had given consideration to many forms of emergency taxation and that the law was enacted after "fullest consideration."

That the tax does not levy receipts or sales tax as such, b a tax on the privilege of selli tangible personal property at r tail.

That the United States Department of Commerce figures show the average merchant had sales of $3,413 and that his tax would be only $34.13.

That the majority of the relief funds supplied by the tax was spent with retailers.

That the complainants can not raise the question of validity of exemptions, because if they are invalid it would not relieve the complainants from payment of the tax.

That under the due process clause of the Federal Constitution, even if it be shown that a tax is oppressive or excessive, such fact will not in itself render the tax unconstitutional.

That the Supreme Court has recognized that the privilege taxes imposed upon vendors a customarily passed on to co sumers.

That a tax which may be passed on is not confiscatory.

Complainants' Points.

Chief contentions in the brief of the complainants included:

That, if the tax is measured by gross receipts, the original act is discriminatory and therefore invalid under the twenty-third article of the bill of rights of the State constitution and the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution.

That the tax is a direct levy, for the most part, on the retailers and that they cannot shift it to the consumers.

That it is not contemplated that the comptroller should have the authority to pass upon the constitutionality of the act and upon that ground to refund all tax payments made under it.

That the act is a "unique piece of legislation," in that its title and section 72-B do not harmonize with many of its other provisions on grounds that the title and that section provide for a tax on personal property sold at retail on the "gross receipts," but that the term "gross receipts" does not appear elsewhere in the act.

That the exemption of automobile dealers from payment of the tax constitutes a discrimination.

Farmer Starts 60-Day Term In Hen House Gun Trap Death

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Staunton, Va., July 2.—Having completed his planting, Robert Jenkins, colored, of Augusta County, appeared in Circuit Court yesterday and received a sentence of 60 days in jail on a plea of guilty to setting up a shotgun trap in his henhouse that killed John Henry Jackson, also colored.

Jenkins was tried June 6, after pleading guilty to arranging the gun in his chicken house so that it would fire on any one bent upon stealing fowls, as had been done several times, the owner told the court.

Judge Joseph A. Blasgow, after reviewing the evidence, instructed Jenkins to return home and complete his planting, but to come back for sentence. Jenkins started serving his time immediately.

"Hamlet," on Stage, "Lawrence of Arabia," on Screen, Will Star Leslie Howard

By Nelson B. Bell.

If present plans hold, important contributions to both wings of the theater may be expected from Leslie Howard next season and the season after.

Having closed his New York run in Robert E. Sherwood's "The Petrified Forest" last Saturday night, Mr. Howard is preparing a leisurely return to his country place in Surrey, England, via Bermuda.

An airview of his estate, not far from London, gives it the general appearance of a sky photo of Georgetown University—except that it is not perched on an eminence—the Canyon Hotel in Yellowstone Park or 500 or 600 of the Thousand Islands combined in a single patch of ground.

When he returns to the American theater next fall, Mr. Howard will appear in "Hamlet" for a Broadway presentation and brief tour. His season as the melancholy Dane will not exceed 12 weeks, according to his present declarations.

After that he has it in mind to persuade the Warner Bothers, to whom all of his celluloid images are pledged, to make a film biography of the late T. E. Lawrence—"Lawrence of Arabia"—with Mr. Howard in the title role.

Resembles Hero.

It has been observed that Mr. Howard bears a distinct personal resemblance to the late hero of the Arabian armies serving the Crown.

If the Warners can not find time or space for this project, Mr. Howard hopes to "sell" some other studio on the idea, although it is not entirely clear what his Warner contract may have to say concerning this idea.

Mr. Howard also is owner of the rights of a play that has intrigued his interest under the title of "And Now Goodbye." This, however, appears to be two or three seasons away.

"And Now Goodbye," it seems to this column, might be reserved until Mr. Howard is prepared to retire permanently to his Surrey acres and then employed as the vehicle of his farewell.

It is Mr. W. A. Whitney, one of this department's indefatigable operatives, who preceives some slight incongruity in certain aspects of Edward Arnold's personal appearance on the stage of Loew's Fox Theater this week. Mr. Whitney recalls that Mr. Arnold first came to the Capital's attention as a member of the National Theater Players about a decade ago, achieved sudden eminence on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot, now returns to a Loew stage in Washington in a scene from his forthcoming Universal starring picture, "Diamond Jim," and urges those who wish to write him pertaining to his pictures to address him at Columbia! Mr. Arnold, admirable actor, evidently is one who feels that if you are going to get anywhere in moving pictures, you'd better move.

Out of the Nowhere.

Hindsight, it appears, sometimes is better than the much-vaunted foresight. Take the case of the recent Joe Louis-Primo Carnera embroglio at the Yankee Stadium in New York, for example.

Although Mike Jacobs, the Twentieth Century Club impresario, who temporarily converted the Yankee ballyard into an abattoir, officially banned motion picture cameramen from making a pictorial record of the modern version of the story of David and Goliath, pictures were taken anyway and are now being exhibited on various important theater circuits, Loew's among them.

Sam Fried and Jack Dietz, of the Ronny Pictures Corporation, it is disclosed by the Motion Picture Daily, placed a cameraman in one of the boxes in Yankee Stadium and he photographed each of the six rounds the Joe Louis joyride covered without being noticed.

Bobs Up in West.

After the ribbons were developed, Dietz showed the film to Promoter Jacobs and a deal was negotiated for the film rights. Contracts were signed last Thursday afternoon and late that night a deal was entered into with Loew's.

Despite existing prohibitory legislation on the statute books, prints of the fight pictures have bobbed up as far West as Ohio, where they had to be viewed by the board of censors before they could be exhibited in Columbus and Cleveland.

One assumes that under the acquiescence-after-the-fact arrangement here invoked for the first time, Mr. Dietz and Mr. Jacobs found themselves relieved of the necessity of cutting the profits so many different ways that only peanuts would accrue to the individual "investor." This way they presumably get it all, which is much better, any way you look at it.

From Helen Hoerle, an astute young woman who holds an alert finger on the pulse of the theater, one learns that Gene Lockhart is directing the Persian fantasy, "Sumurun," for presentation in the Hollywood Bowl the last week in August, he having staged the pantomime in the Hecksher Theater in New York with great success four years ago. At the moment, Mr. Lockhart is playing a featured role before the cameras in Universal's production of "Storm Over the Andes."

It is Miss Hoerle also who makes known that Joseph Schildkraut is no actor to be content with the acquisition to the rights of only a single play. He has just come honestly by another one by Leo Perutz, "Why Don't You Belive Me?" written in association with Paul Frank. This melodramatic farce will be produced immediately after the Perutz-Hans Adler comedy, "Tomorrow Is a Holiday."

Kressin Is Signed.

The Washington Community Players have announced through the assiduous, but badly out of alignment, typewriter of Bess Davis Schreiner that Eugene Kressin, a member of the Roadside Theater acting company and one of the most popular of the Capital's resident Thespians, will appear in the role of Demetrius in their production of Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," to be presented in the Sylvan Theater on the Monument Grounds Wednesday, July 10, at 8 p. m.

This occasion will mark the sixth in the series of "Summer Festival" programs being presented by the Community Center Department and the Office of National Capital Parks.

Wanted, a Dog!

The engagement of Mr. Kressin for this important assignment is made possible by the fact that he is not cast in "Grand Gesture," second of the Roadside productions, and therefore is briefly "on vacation" from his regular "barn theater" duties.

In the role of Demetrius, Mr. Kressin will play opposite Adele Whiteside, as Helena, with Edythe Lazaroff Goldman as Hermia and Herman P. Riess as Lysander, the group of "lovers" in the play, who, this season, are being coached by Esther Galbraith. Robert Halstead is coaching the "artisans."

The Community Players, by the way, are sending out an SOS call for "Ugly," the Park Police dog, that appeared with such distinguished success with them in last season's presentation of the fantasy.

The plight of the lowly literateur who writes the plays we see in the audible screen's shadowy embodiments is being given big-league attention at last. When the postman rang four or five times yistiddy, one of the communications from distant points which he left neatly tucked under our door was a two-page, single-spaced appeal for help in making known to the world the dirty deal the screen writer has been getting up to now. It was signed — and apparently not with a rubber stamp—by Ernest Pascal, president of the Screen Writers Guild of the Authors League of America, and dated June 26, 1935, at 1655 North Cherokee avenue, Hollywood, Calif. The contentions in Mr. Pascal's letter are so sound and open so many wide avenues of discussion that they will not be detailed or comprehensively considered here or now. Fair warning is given, however, that there may be a good deal upon the matter in next Sabbath's two-column lead in the enlarged amusement section of the big Sunday Post—the biggest 5 cents worth on the street corners and newsstands. Order your copy now. (Advt.)

Aspirants Strut Stuff!

The great of show business walked the boards of the National Theater last night. There were Greta Garbo, and Nick Lucas, and Gilda Gray; there were the Four Mills Brothers, and Cookie Bowers, and Eddie Foy. Bill Robinson, Lawrence Tibbett, one of the Marx Brothers and a gang of Ziegfeld chorines were also there. There were many more, besides.

Yes, all of the stars of the entertainment world of yesterday and today were represented, not in person, of course, but by talented Washington prototypes who "gave their all" for a place in the "Going Native" revue that Loew's Fox Theater will present for the third successive year early in August.

Gene Ford was unduly exuberant. And well he might be, for though this year's applications for the revue are just a few less than last year, the talent, according to Producer Ford, "is so vastly superior that I'm wondering how in the world I can use everyone I'd like to."

Forty Applicants Heard.

Up to 11 o'clock Ford had auditioned some 40 applicants, ranging from 18-year-olds to an entertaining gentleman who was well on in the fifties.

Several of the applicants enthusiastically greeted by those out front were Joe Bell, who sings and plays a guitar like Nick Lucas; Karl Sonderson and his educated dog, Bozo; Jeanne Christian, whose hula dance was remindful of Gilda Gray; Lillian Conn, a second Evelyn Tyner on the piano; Ruth Barbour, a "blues" singer with a personality; "The Dixie Harmonies," with their authentic and rich spirituals; Al Griffith, a venerable entertainer who can imitate anything from a cornet to a dog fight; Ted Field, a local college thespian, whose impersonation of Garbo caused a mild laugh riot, and Edward Ehrmantrout, whose tap dancing promises a bright future.

Two-thirds of the applicants were making their first bid before an audience. With few exceptions, the others were non-professionals.

When Clifford Odets' play of "Waiting for Lefty" is repeated in the auditorium of the National Press Club tonight at 8:30 o'clock, the cast will be comprised of David Lyons, Dan Harris, Jack Bowden, Rose Skopp, who also directed; Max Milton, Sam El, Elise P. Singer, John Carroll, Milton Pogorelskin, Robert Levins, Valerie Deane, Fulton Richards and Peter Morris. Some of these members of the New Theater Group double in important parts. A dance divertissement, a dramatic reading and short skit will precede the presentation of the much-discussed play. So now you know.

Pulling-the-Punch Note.

Since "Waiting for Lefty" is said to have been slightly denatured and to have had its temperature lowered for the local presentations, it might be inquired, casually, "Odets, where is thy sting?"

Then, again, of course, it might not.

Brazilian Midshipmen See Drills at Annapolis

The visitors, five senior and 27 junior officers and 29 midshipmen from the Brazilian ship Almirante Saldanha, now in New York harbor, arrived today and leave after breakfast tomorrow. They came here from Washington by train. Tonight they were guests at a Spanish-dialogue moving picture.

Hit Is Scored By Roadsiders In a New Play

By Nelson B. Bell.

"GRAND GESTURE." The Roadside Theater presents a new play in three acts and four scenes by Winona Godfrey. Directed by Harrold Weinberger; settings by Edith I. Allen. Offered for the first time on any stage by arrangement with Adrienne Morrison.

THE CAST:

Ernestine Trywood.....Jane R. Duenner
Judy Bedell.....Dorothy Deitz
Dene Donovan.....Virginia Rand
Stephanie Hewlett.....Adele Gusack
Jasper Hewlett.....Denis E. Connell
William Bunn.....Paul Bradbury Walter
Tom Rainey.....Ed Stelingson
Crispen Morel.....Richard Stringfellow
Maid .....Sylvia Donovitz

Affording a slightly novel approach to the familiar dramatic theme of May marrying December, "Grand Gesture," presented for the first time on any stage by the Roadside Theater Company last night, is a literate, direct and well-sustained "drawing-room" comedy-drama that takes rank as perhaps the most workmanlike job of journeyman playwriting that has been essayed from manuscript by any local acting group.

This is not to say that Winona Godfrey's three acts and four scenes are ready to burst upon Broadway and command its eager attention as they now stand. The play, as written, is at times a little verbose, although it is never shoddily written, and of action there is practically none. There is, in fact, very little movement of any sort, many long scenes being played by two persons seated and only necessary entrances and exits disturbing a dramatically static reading of lines. This could be remedied with no great difficulty.

Miss Godfrey, who could not be present to profit by the first public performance of her play because she is a scenario writer busily engaged on the West Coast, has contrived a work which, happily, pursues a course of cumulative interest and literary and emotional worth. Her third act is easily the best of the three.

A Domestic Quadrangle.

The story, and therefore essentially the dramatic conflict and emotional appeal of the piece, centers in a middle-aged father of a charming daughter who becomes engaged to a young woman of about his daughter's age. The daughter, having discouraged one ardent suitor, is wooed by another, whom she accepts. This is a young man who has drifted into a position of some difficulty without precisely realizing it. A very genuine and exceedingly troublesome love affair develops between the daughter's fiance and her father's intended wife. From this situation is evolved an intelligent, well-argued and effective philosophy of love and marriage that is thoroughly sane without ever becoming mildly exciting.

"Grand Gesture" is surprisingly well played by a judiciously chosen cast of local Thespians who long since have earned their spurs in dramas quite as exacting as the present.

Principals Score.

Denis Connell, although not favored with so colorful a role as he had last year in the premiere of "Welcome to His Excellency," lends dignity, forcefulness and charm to the character of the elderly father whose adult point of view saves four lives from the debacle usually precipitated by what might be termed "marriages of convenience."

The roles of daughter and fiancee are splendidly played by Adele Gusack and Virginia Rand, who bring a distinctly professional touch to both their reading and the manner in which they comport themselves behind the footlights.

Dorothy Dietz, as Judy Bedell, a symbol of contrast and a source of much of the comedy of line, lost something of the full effect that might have been hers through failure to project many of her speeches beyond the fourth row.

Is Excellently Staged.

Three conspicuous male roles were enacted with full regard for their importance to the plot by Ed Stevlingson, as the victim of misplaced affection; Richard Stringfellow, the abandoned suitor, and Paul Bradbury Walter, as a young divinity student who won a wordling and made her like it. Of these, Mr. Stringfellow rather led the way.

Jane R. Duenner and Sylvia Donovitt complete the cast and maintain the high level of its excellence.

The staging is vastly superior to that of the company's first bill and adds to the impressiveness of a successful effort to fulfill one of the major functions of the summer theater.

Watching Them Make Pictures.

Hollywood, July 2.

THE characters and the setting of the noted "Barbary Coast" are even very colorful on Sam Goldwyn's sound stage at the United Artists' studio. This particular set is a gambling casino. Dice are being rolled; a roulette wheel is turning; bartenders are making drinks at a long mahogany bar, and Miriam Hopkins, dressed in an alluring gown of the period, is there for the gold rush. She is sitting at a table with the big shot gambler, for here's where she'll do her gold digging. The big shot gambler is Edward G. Robinson, and he is wearing an earring—class in those days.

At one of the gambling tables, out of the focus of Director Howard Hawks' camera, a group of extras are passing the time playing poker. For the camera they will play poker for gold, but now on their own they are playing poker for pennies.

* * * *

There are a number of former big name picture people working as extras. There are John Ince, Jerome Storm and G. Raymond Nye, three directors who were prominent in the making of silent flickers. Another extra is Harry Gant, who was once Nye's ace cameraman. Gant was known to the industry as the "Cowboy Cameraman," for the marvelous work he did in filming westerns.

It is interesting to watch the gamblers and cowboys in this Frisco saloon. The gamblers feel wealthy fingering their stacks of chips, and the cowboys assume a bravado with their prop guns. They are all playing house.

* * * *

STANDING defiantly, and looking strong and brave, is an Indian in the makeup of his tribe. The Indian is Jim Thorpe.

Thorpe is a genuine Indian, and he appears to be happy portraying one in this flicker. He, too, wants to play house. Thorpe, as you don't have to be told, is one of the greatest athletes this Nation has produced—if not the greatest. He is selected on the list whenever an all-time All-American football team is picked. You can't read a book on track and field events without finding his name. Here, too, he is said to be the greatest. Recently, sports writers have been comparing the new sensation, Jess Owen, with Thorpe. It is a matter of speculation as to which would have triumphed in a track meet. An imaginary contest between the present champion and a past champ is always good speculation and good copy.

On this very Saturday that I am watching Jim Thorpe walk across the "Barbary Coast" set, an extra, Jesse Owen, is racing before thousands at San Diego—the whole show.

* * * *

Jim Thorpe claims that he has no regrets. He is now a family man, and he is working, that's the important thing. More important than track records. He has never seen Owen run. On the two occasions that Owen raced in this part of the country, Thorpe was on call at a studio.

Like a thoroughbred champion, Thorpe's only comment is: "Owen's races speak for themselves. He's a wonder."

And in that contest which can never take place, you can't convince me that I wasn't looking at the winner as he walked slowly across the "Barbary Coast" set when Director Hawks shouted "Action."

* * * *

WHEN the Marx lads are working, there is always a crowd on the set—the Marx Brothers themselves are a crowd. There was also the other performers in "A Night at the Opera"—the stand-ins, Director Sam Wood, George S. Kaufman and Gag Man Al Boasberg. Kaufman is generally on the set. He is taking lessons in movie making while assisting in the making of this picture. He pays attention to the camera and is fast acquiring the movie technique. His presence is a great aid to Groucho, Chico and Harpo, for they have their confidence in him.

The Marx lads, after playing a scene, will rush over to Kaufman and go into a huddle with him. Then they go out to play the scene again. Kaufman, sitting in a camp chair, appears to be a football coach. The players go to him for their instructions, and then rush into action.

Although Groucho, Chico and Harpo played many of the comedy scenes of "A Night at the Opera" on a special vaudeville tour, there is much rewriting being done.

* * * *

In fact, Kaufman told that he was considering taking one of the usual advertisement writer's place in the movie trade papers, only his would read "George S. Kaufman — just completed 'A Night at the Opera.' Now in preparation — revised script 'A Night at the Opera.'"

Al Boasberg also had a night. He explained why a week's shooting on the flicker had to be scrapped and entirely remade. It was all a terrible mistake. They had filmed the scenes with the stand-ins for Groucho, Chico and Harpo, and had just discovered it.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich

Boston, July 2.

THIS is no quarrel of mine, but I am forced to admire the success with which young Cecil Travis is resisting the attempts of a blatant critic to write him off third base on the Washington Club by a series of poison pen blasts in one of the public prints of the Capital. The 21-year-old kid is currently engaged in making a full-blown sucker out of the guy.

POVICH.

Manager Bucky Harris not only is satisfied, but elated, with Travis' conduct at third base. Owner Clark Griffith regards him as the outstanding third sacker in the league, bar none. But an undercurrent of dissatisfaction with Travis, which originated with disgruntled Washington pitchers who were getting their ears pinned back regularly and are looking for an alibi, has gained the support of one of the journalists traveling with the team, and that is too bad.

This man has authored pieces for his paper recommending that Travis be converted into an outfielder, or, perhaps, a first baseman, because as a third baseman he ranks only one degree above no third baseman at all. His hitting ability, he admits, is too great to permit Travis to slip off the team entirely.

Now, ain't 'at sump'n? If the guy really wanted to put Travis on the pan and fry him proper, whyinell didn't he wait until he had a reason? As it is, the kid is showing him up at every turn. This the wrong year, buddy, to hop on Travis. Some other year, mebbe, but not this season. All that Travis is doing is leading all the league's third basemen in hitting, and if the fielding averages were available at this writing he'd rate one-two-three defensively or these eyes have been sadly amiss.

TRAVIS has heard the pitchers buzzing among themselves, with unkind glances in his direction, and his friends have sent him the clippings deriding his play at third base. Verily, he has been on the spot. And what has happened Why, the kid has been going out there and giving million-dollar performances around that third sack so-continuously that baseball folks around the circuit speak with reverence when they speak of Travis.

This department cheerfully admits that Travis has a weakness. He's no rip-snorter on bunts. Ossie Bluege spoiled followers of the Washington team in that respect. Any successor to Bluege took the job with two figurative strikes on him. "Bluege would a-had it" is a byword every time Travis messes up one of those slow rollers. But who wouldn't look bad on bunts in contrast to Bluege? And the kid's only 21, remember that.

But with that, the justice in any complaint against Travis must end. On those hard-hit balls to left and right and down the middle, the fellow is a cat. Every day during the last month he has been coming up with balls that should shame his critics into a public apology. The same pitchers who have been putting the blast on him have been in his debt so often as a result of his fielding feats that they don't even have the face to register surprise, much less thanks.

And if you want to talk about the kid's throwing arm, listen to any manager in the league and all arguments will be silenced. Stronger than Bluege's, only a bit less accurate, Travis' arm is sure death to base runners. His throws are things of beauty and the guy who says he has a weakness there should come under the heading of violent cases at St. Elizabeths Academy.

THEY don't have the nerve to find fault with Travis' hitting. Its greatness is too obvious. He came to the Nats at the end of the 1933 season touted as a great natural hitter. His better than .300 average of last season, his first full year in the majors, didn't do much to disturb that opinion. And at this writing, the kid is powdering that old apple for an average of .306, which is not only highly respectable, but just about the best average of any third baseman in the league by more than 10 points.

Just by way of indicating the esteem in which he is held by such an astute baseball man as Clark Griffith, who has been watching and playing baseball for nigh on to 48 years, it will require no less than $100,000 cash on the line to pry Travis away from the Washington Club. Nobody's taking him at that price, but Cleveland did offer $50,000 for him last spring with the intention of shifting Odell Hale back to second base.

Ossie Bluege used to be a pretty fair third baseman himself. Advancing years may have cut down the radius in which he was able to move, but he is still able to roam far enough to stamp himself the best defensive shortstop in the league this season. And Travis ousted Bluege from the third base job last year when Bluege was a year younger. What do you make of it? The defense rests.

Gallico Informs the English About Movies and Spotlights

By Paul Gallico.

A Special Correspondent.

NEW YORK, July 2.—The English officials here with the British amateur golden gloves boxing team looked with considerable amazement and not a little amused scorn at the preparations made by those mad Americans for the celebration for a simple meeting between two amateur boxing teams. They don't do things like that in Merrie England, and they don't understand quite why we do. To them it seems needless swank that detracts from the main business t hand. All our business with spotlight and music cues and flags and what we call presentation just makes them a little tired.

This department grew very wroth last night because, having ordered large motion picture spotlights to pick up the corners of the fighters at the dramatic moments, he discovered two little pin points of light on the roof of the Yankee Stadium that looked like some guy standing up there waving a hand flashlight. The Londoners looked at me in surprise as I blew up, and said, "Really, old man, I don't see what you want them for at all."

We had some of the ring lights on, testing them, and the visitors said—"Won't those be dreadfully hot?" I said that they would be rather hot but that they would be just as hot for our boys as they would for the English. They then indicated that they weren't worrying about that, but inasmuch as it would be uncomfortable why not cut half of them out. I then explained that if we didn't have full lighting the still photographers and motion picture men wouldn't be able to make pictures. Whereupon they said—"But is that necessary?"

Tangle of Rules.

Boxing is ridden by rules, and this international show tonight was somenow by the grace of the sense of humor of the English visitors extricated from three sets of rules and customs, the American A. A. U. rules, the International Federation rules, governing international contests, and the English amateur rules. In short, the English don't do anything the way the Americans do it, and vice versa, and the International Federation doesn't do anything the way either one of them does. And yet the matter was simple enough and we were in accord from start to finish. English and Americans wanted to have a good show with a fair chance for every fighter on the card. But we had to wrestle ourselves out of a mess of rules and regulations. Every time we would decide on something that seemed to be a good idea and satisfactory to everybody, it was against some kind of rule. No wonder they call those guys who are sent to foreign countries diplomats.

Benge Blanks Boston As Brooklyn Triumphs

Brooklyn, July 2 (AP).—Ray Benge, pitching a complete game for the first time since May 17, held the Boston Braves to three hits as the Brooklyn Dodgers won the first game of the series, 5 to 0, today.

The Braves, with Wally Berger getting the only extra-base hit, a double in the fourth, did not get a runner as far as third base until the ninth, when Benge handed out two of his five walks.

Linke Routed By Rally in Seventh

Manush's Two Triples Score Three Mates in Early Innings.

By Shirley L. Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

BOSTON, July 2.—The hop on Ed Linke's fast ball was terrific today. It leaped over the left-field wall of Fenway Park three times with a little encouragement from the Red Sox bats and tore another ball game out of the clutches of the Nats.

The final figures were 6 to 5, close but conclusive.

But there was nothing close about the game as it wore into the seventh inning. The Nats had established Linke in a 5-0 lead at one point and it was 5-1 when the Sox began to create their big disturbance.

Linke had a two-hit game in his possession going into the seventh. He had pitched a home-run to Ellsworth Dahlgren in the fifth, but in the seventh it became habit forming. Before he was humanely removed by Manager Harris, he also had pitched home-runs to Bing Miller and Bill Werber. Thus three of the five Boston hits off Linke were homers.

Lead Cut to 5 to 2.

Miller's smash over the left-field wall cut the Nats' lead to 5 to 2 and Linke then pitched a single to Rick Ferrell. But against Bill Werber he went native again and Werber banged a homer over the same left-field wall to slash the Nats' lead to 5 to 4.

At this point Jack Russell was rushed to Linke's relief, with none out as yet. Russell put the tying run on base in a twinkling by walking Dahlgren. A sacrifice put him on second. Then, as if disgusted with the Nats' wasteful ways, Lady Luck turned a broad back upon them and lavished her smiles upon the Red Sox as they went ahead and won the ball game.

It was a cruel finish for the Nats at that. With one out and the tying run on second, Melillo's single was a lucky handle hit that dropped in the midst of Kuhel, Myer and Stone in short right field, advanced Dahlgren to third and put the winning run on base.

The Sox tied the score at 5 to 5 when Dahlgren scored from third on Almada's grounder to Myer and then, with Melillo on second, the Sox found their luck still grade A. Roy Johnson hit an ordinary pop fly over the infield and a capricious wind took it just out of Ossie Bluege's reach as Melillo galloped home with the ball game.

Manush Triples Twice.

Back in the early innings, while Linke was breezing along toward the Nats' first well pitched ball game in their 21-day road trip, Heinie Manush had lent him encouragement with a pair of triples against Rube Walberg that figured mightily in Linke's 5-to-0 lead.

Walberg found himself in trouble in the third inning when he walked Kuhel and then foozled Linke's attempted sacrifice. Ossie Bluege scored 'em both with a double against the left field wall and Manush banged a triple to right that scored Bluege and gave the Nats a 3-0 lead.

It was 5-0 in the fifth. With two out, Stone and Myer singled to right and Manush scored 'em both with a three-bagger down the right field line.

There was no general alarm

Howell to Enter Virginia Amateur

Decides to Seek Title for Fourth Time.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., July 2.—Billy Howell, three times winner of the State amateur golf title, decided definitely today that he'll take another crack at the crown in the four-day tournament which begins over the Cascades course at Hot Springs Thursday.

Still trying to hit the heights again after several years of disappointment, Billy, after wavering for days, said today he'd try it again.

He'll have one of the three favorites' spots in the tournament, joining Bobby Reigel, of Richmond, Southern amateur champion, and Morton McCarthy, of Norfolk, Middle Atlantic titlist, as the pre-tournament choices.

Tigers Defeat Tribe, Gain 2d Place

Bridges Gives 7 Blows; Stewart Pounded Out in 8-3 Contest.

By the Associated Press.

DETROIT, July 2.—The Detroit Tigers climbed over Cleveland into second place in the American League pennant race today by shellacking the Tribe for the second time in as many days, 8 to 3.

The victory gave the Tigers an 11-point edge over Cleveland in the pursuit of the speeding Yanks, who continued their winning ways by taking the Athletics into camp today.

Tommy Bridges hurled the distance for the winners and let the Tribe down with seven hits, two of them homers. Winegarner, who relieved Walter Stewart on the mound in the sixth, connected for a circuit clout in the seventh and Campbell clouted one over the fence in the eighth.

Wild at Start.

Cleveland's other run came as a result of early wildness by Bridges. He walked the first two men to face him, Galatzer and Knickerbocker. Vosmik singled to fill the bases and Galatzer scored when Campbell forced Vosmik.

The Tigers evened things in the third when Fox singled and came home on an infield out and single. It was the twenty-second consecutive game in which Fox has hit safely. They went on a hitting rampage in the fifth and before Stewart finally retired the tenth man to face him in the inning the Detroiters had scored 5 runs.

With one out, Fox singled, Cochrane flied out and Gehringer pushed Fox to third with a single. Stewart passed Greenberg to get at Goslin and the Goose responded with a double that cleared the bases. Rogell walked and Walker singled to score Goslin, Rogell scoring on Owen's single.

Vosmik Escapes Injury.

Bridges lined to Vosmik to end the inning, but not before the injury-haunted Manager Walter Johnson saw Vosmik plow into the scoreboard after the drive. Vosmik was out for a few minutes, but resumed play.

Gehringer finished the Tiger scoring in the sixth when he hit a homer with Cochrane on base

Giants Trim Phils With 7 Run Rally

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 2.—After failing in his three previous starts, Roy Parmelee finally went the route today to hang up his ninth victory of the season as the New York Giants bunched eight of their ten blows in the second to score seven runs and defeat the Phillies, 8 to 4.

All of the seven runs crossed the plate after two were out, Mel Ott's seventeenth homer with Bill Terry on base, accounting for the final two tallies. The circuit drive put Ott in a tie with Jimmy Collins, of the Cardinals, for National League honors.

Mackmen Lose To Yankees in Seesaw Tilt

4 Philadelphia Hurlers Fail to Stop Drive in Late Innings.

By the Associated Press.

PHILADELPHIA, July 2.—Rallying in the late innings with two clusters of three runs each and another of two, the New York Yankees took the measure of the Philadelphia Athletics, 8 to 5, in the first engagement of their two-game series today.

The A's got away to a three-run lead, counting once in each of the first, fourth and fifth innings, but the Yankees tied it up with a three-run rally in the sixth. The Mackmen moved ahead in their half of the frame only to have the Yankees score three times again in the eighth as Lou Gehrig hit his tenth homer with Red Rolfe on the sacks.

In the ninth, Johnny Murphy's double, a triple by Earle Combs and Ben Chapman's single sent two more across the plate. Murphy, who relieved Johnny Broaca after the sixth, received credit for the victory while Dietrich, one of the four Philadelphia hurlers to see service, was charged with the defeat.

Cubs Defeat Reds, 9-3; Boost Hold on 2d Place

Cincinnati, July 2 (AP).—Chicago's Cubs trounced the Cincinnati Reds handily again today, winning, 9 to 3, to strengthen their hold on second place.

A single, a double and Hartnett's homer drove Si Johnson from the hill before the game was many minutes old, and it was not until Hollingsworth took up the burden in the sixth that the Cubs were checked.

Umpire O'Day, One of Game's Great, Is Dead

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, July 2.—The Great Arbiter called a great arbiter "out" today as Hank O'Day closed his eyes in death.

Loser in a courageous battle for life, a fight destined to be lost at the start of his illness months ago, O'Day, one of baseball's greatest umpires, died in the Presbyterian Hospital, of cancer and bronchial pneumonia.

The man whose eyes saw a million plays on the diamond in his 50 years' connection with the game, including the never-to-be-forgotten "bonehead" play of Fred Merkle, first baseman for the New York Giants, that cost the Giants the National League championship in 1908, passed on peacefully.

No one knew his exact age, but the best guess is that he was 74 years old. He was born in 1861, according to baseball record books, but he never would admit it. He lived in hotels most of his life and had no close relatives, so far as is known.

A picturesque figure, with a somber face that caused him to be called "the reverend" in baseball circles, O'Day was best known as an umpire in the National League, but he interrupted his career calling balls and strikes long enough to manage the Cincinnati Reds in 1912 and the Chicago Cubs in 1914. He started his career as a pitcher and played with New York, Washginton and Pittsburgh, besides minor league clubs, before joining the National League as an umpire in 1895. He served as umpire in chief until retired in 1927. He was on the pay roll of the league at the time of his death.

Cards Shut Out Bucs, Climb In League

Hallahan Holds as Team Scores 7-0 Victory in Home Opener.

By the Associated Press.

ST. LOUIS, July 2.—The world champion Cardinals climbed back into third place in the National League today by blanking the Pittsburgh Pirates, 7 to 0, in their first home stand after an unsuccessful road tour.

Wild Bill Hallahan, pitching his first complete victory of the season, was in fine fettle and held the wild-swinging Pirate batsmen to three scattered hits while his teammates pounded out eleven bingles off two Pittsburgh hurlers. Pirate errors helped swell the Cardinal run total.

Daily Double Pays Off at $139.40

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

CHARLES TOWN, W. Va., July 2.—The horse with the shortest name at this track, Ado, stretched his winning streak to three in a row today by defeating some of the best sprinters on the grounds in the 7-furlong fourth race, the outstanding spot on the program. The gelded son of Sun Edwin and Lodore proved his versatility, too, for his previous victories were at 5 and 6½ furlongs.

As usual, Ralph Hilley, whose name is listed on the program as "W. Hilley," had the mount and he made no mistakes. Ado broke alertly as Decorate and Inscription went out to battle for the pace-setting honors, and Hilley seemed content to follow during this stage of the race.

Approaching the stretch, Hilley called on his mount for speed and Ado answered with a rush that sent him to the top. Inscription lost some ground but came again to nose out Decorate for the second money.

Pays $6.60 Mutuel.

Ado and Star Queen, one that ran a poor race, jockeyed in the betting, with the latter being installed the favorite. Ado finally paid a rather substantial $6.60 mutuel.

Those who endeavored to pick two winners instead of one and were successful had $139.40 waiting for them at the daily-double windows. After Sioux Chief, a lukewarm paddock tip, won the first race the possible prices on the double ranged from $124.80 to $593. The "double" was completed by Blind Playdema in a nose finish with Iwintoo. The finish was so close that many in the crowd got their daily booing out of their systems.

3,500 Fans Watch.

Some 3,500 were out to see the program under ideal conditions. A cooling breeze was following the Shenandoah River and the track was as fast as it will ever be.

Apprentice Jockey Raymond Booker was suspended for the remainder of the meeting for listless riding on the horse Daffy in the sixth race.

The battle for riding honors here found Hilley moving into second position with 28 winners, after scoring three victories for the day. Johnny Shanks, who has 29, and Eddie Smith, with 26, were shut-out.

WINGED FLIGHT moved up steadily, loomed up threateningly in the last sixteenth, but was unable to make up any appreciable ground in the closing stages. ONWARD, hard ridden while chasing the pacemaker, faltered in the last quarter-mile. MANTADOS saved ground in the stretch, but was unable to reach the leaders.

Sara Moore and Mary Cootes Win Way to District Net Final

Mrs. Turney, Miss Ryan Beaten

Old DominionChampion Pressed to Triumph by 6-4, 6-3.

By George Considine.

AS was to be expected, Mary Cootes and Sara Moore yesterday pounded their respective ways into the final of the District of Columbia tennis championships over the limp forms of Mary Ryan and Bobsey Turney at the Columbia Country Club.

Old Dominion champion, Miss Cootes was worried somewhat by Miss Ryan's tantalizing chops. It wasn't until well into the second set that the Smith College ace solved the deceptive Ryan strategy and smashed her powerful shots with flawless accuracy. The scores, 6—4; 6—3, present a tell-tale picture of the battle.

In a stirring 6—1, 6—3 triumph Sara Moore, City of Washington champion, dazzled Mrs. Turney by her sheer power which was delicately punctuated by back-breaking dropshots. However, the valiant Bobsey found herself momentarily at the start of the second set reeling off the first three games. But Miss Moore, stroking the ball as crushingly as a Moody or a Jacobs, swept out six in a row for the match.

Gain Doubles Final.

The stubbornest sort of opposition was displayed in both semifinal doubles encounters before the Moore-Miller and the Cootes-Turney combinations gained title-round berths. Having taken a lead of 4—1 and 40-love in the final set, Frances Bassett and Mary Ryan nearly created the greatest upset of the tournament. But the favored Cootes and Turney buckled to their task to win five straight.

Dorette Miller and Sara Moore had to go at top speed all the way to defeat Eleanor Craven and Betty Kronman, 10—8, 6—4.

The singles final has been scheduled at 2:30 this afternoon, while play for the doubles title will commence at 4 o'clock.

Red Sox Overcome Lead to Beat Nats

among the Nats when Linke pitched his home run to Dahlgren in the fifth, but when Linke began specializing in 'em in the seventh, well, that was the beginning of the end.

And that one lone hit the Nats made off Pitcher George Hockette of the Red Sox in the last four innings didn't contribute anything to whatever success they had.

Buddy Myer preserved his consecutive game-hitting streak with a single in the fifth inning. He has now run his record to 21 games.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

FREDERICK, Md., July 2.—Brunswick continued its winning streak in the Tri-County League—Frederick, Carroll and Montgomery counties—by defeating New Market, 14 to 7; Church Hill set back Point of Rocks, 14 to 7; Wakefield took the measure of Cedar Grove, 12 to 8; Walkersville won from Jefferson, 8 to 2; Middletown led Damascus, 1 to 0, and Mount Airy triumphed over Frederick, 9 to 0. Good-sized crowds witnessed all of the games.

The Brunswick-New Market tilt was close until the seventh inning, when the Railroaders clinched the fray. New Market took the lead in the first session with four runs after which Carey succeeded Hawes on the mound. Twice Brunswick came from behind. In addition to holding Damascus to five scattered hits Pete Shank, a rookie, made the hit which scored Middletown's lone run. Buxton went the route for the Montgomery County team and limited the Valleyites to seven hits. Shank pulled out of a hole in the sixth inning when he loaded the bases with one out. The victory moved Middletown into third place in the pennant race.

Lefty Warrenfeltz held Jefferson to 5 hits and struck out 17. The game was a pitchers' duel between Warrenfeltz and Boyer until the seventh when the latter weakened and two errors, a walk and four hits game the Glade Valley team seven runs. A hard line drive pulled down by G. Ramsburg for a double play with the bases loaded helped Walkersville out of a bad place in the seventh inning.

Wakefield Rallies.

Wakefield broke its succession of defeats by a rally in the eighth inning for four runs to overcome Cedar Grove. Barnes went the route for the winners while Cedar Grove used three hurlers. Wakefield was trailing until the lucky eighth. Church Hill moved into second place in the pennant race by drubbing Point of Rocks. Church Hill won in the seventh inning by making four runs. After leading the way Frederick blew up and gave the game to Mount Airy on errors. The win put Mount Airy on even terms with Damascus and Walkersville in the pennant scramble.

Cox to Report At Kenwood On Monday

Appointment Is Approved in Spite of Rumors to Contrary.

WIFFY COX, the old Brooklyn fusileer, is going to be golf professional at Kenwood Golf and Country Club, despite rumors afloat yesterday that Cox would not accept the post made vacant a few weeks ago when Al Houghton resigned to become executive manager at Indian Spring.

None other than Cox himself, speaking over long-distance telephone from his Dyker Beach course, declared he had accepted the job and expected to report at Kenwood next Monday.

"I've told them what I wanted, and my cards have been put on the table," Cox said. "I am awaiting confirmation from the Kenwood committee."

Contract Not Signed.

No contract as yet has been signed. Cox's appointment already has been approved by the golf committee and the board, and it is up to Donal L. Chamberlin, Kenwood vice president, to say the word.

Chamberlin yesterday declared that "everything is O. K. as far as Cox is concerned, and I am writing him tonight, telling him to be here by Monday."

Cox made it clear that he was not the pro at Dyker Beach; that he merely was concessionaire at the municipal course. Strictly a business man, he said he planned "to make things hum at Kenwood when I get there."

A change in the plans for the National Public Links sectional qualifying trials was announced yesterday. The first 36 holes will be played at Rock Creek instead of East Potomac, and the remaining 36 holes at East Potomac. Entries will close today with Ed Burns at Rock Creek and Harry Graham at East Potomac. Already 71 have entered.

Danny Burton, the red-haired Army and Navy pro, had one of these "dream" rounds over his course. He shot a 33 on the back nine, with a three-putt green on the twelfth, costing him his only five. He had birdies on the eleventh, thirteenth, fifteenth and seventeenth. Burton fired 33 5, 4 4 4, 4 2 4—three under par. The next morning he negotiated the first nine in 35.

C. A. Mezler and Byron Beall already are in the final of the Manor two-man championship, and stand ready to meet the winner of the semi-final match between Morris Brown and R. R. Reagh and Ralph Gibson and L. H. Whitten. The match may come off Sunday.

Kenwood's professional-elect, Wiffy Cox, played for the Metropolitan P. G. A. pros against the Japanese, Sunday, at Mount Kisco, N. Y., and defeated Nakamura, 4 and 2, in his match. In the doubles Cox teamed with Jimmy Hines and broke even with Asami and Chin. The Americans won, 8½ to ½.

Club at Purcellville Increases Greens Fee

Due to the congestion on the course over the week-end, the greens fee at the Loudoun Golf and Country Club in Purcellsville, Va., has been increased from $1 to $1.50 for Saturdays, Sundays and holidays.

NRA's Streak Checked by Sleuths

Champions Defeated, 13-6, in Opening Game of Second Half.

THE Bureau of Investigation came back with a vengeance yesterday to smash the winning streak of NRA in the Government League and to defeat the first-half Post Association champs, 13 to 6, in the initial game between these rivals in second-half play.

Morris, Fisher, Leverton, Singman and Snyder were the leaders in the Sleuths' hard-hitting attack, as Ray Davidson was protecting Investigation's advantage with his steady pitching.

Am. Water Works Omits Dividend

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 2.—American Water Works & Electric Co. today omitted the dividend on its common stock on which 20 cents a share was paid in the preceding quarter.

The company announced that the board of directors "after giving consideration to the rapidly increasing taxes, restoration of wage scales and major rate reductions to consumers, and the serious problems still confronting the company in with the proposed public utility legislation, took no action on the common dividend."

The company and subsidiaries earned 86 cents a common share in the 12 months ended May 31, compared with $1.43 a common share in the preceding 12 months.

Highlights and Background Of Financial News and Trends

Public Utility Securities Advance With Favorable Congressional Vote on Regulation—Some Short Raids—Wheat Declines.

By Carlton A. Shively.

New York, July 2.—On trading volume of considerably over a million shares, much of it in the public utility stock sector, the share market gained a little ground. Utilities accounted for most of the gains and their strength gave tone to other parts of the securities front, subjected as they were to some short raiding. Bonds were inconspicuous, with the tone a shade easier in Treasury issues. Wheat suffered from profit taking. September futures closed ⅜ of a cent lower at 87¼ cents a bushel.

Perusal in the financial district of the details of the banking bill, as approved by the Senate sub-committee, headed by Senator Glass, brought considerable satisfaction. Some were disappointed that at the last moment the clause was stricken that would have exempted banks from the penal provisions of the new securities act, but that is a matter which may be taken care of later when other needed amendments to the securities act will come up.

In numerous details the amended bill is considered a vast improvement over the original Eccles-Administration measure, which sought complete control by the Administration of a highly centralized banking system, and which went a long distance in opening up real estate loans for the banks, as well as poking toward direct subscription by the Reserve to Treasury loans. Since the Treasury financed the war and the depression, to date, without recourse to forced loans at the Reserve, it may be put down as good policy to forbid such an operation by law, and especially so since a sufficient emergency could bring another change in the legislation.

Improvement.

Constitution of the open market committee, elimination of direct Treasury influence from the board, and other changes apparently give the bill enough safeguards for a sound currency and credit structure. It ought to satisfy those who feel that reconstruction of the Federal Reserve System was necessary, and to reassure those who feared too much concentration of power under political influence. The country can anticipate a board of capable men who will follow sound and flexible policies.

Perhaps the most discussed feature of the Glass amendments, so far as Wall Street is immediately concerned, was the reopening of the capital markets to the banks. The opening looks rather small, to be sure, but it is capable of enlargement; and enactment of the legislation ought to do much to make a fact that breaking of the new capital log jam which was so confidently heralded several months ago in official quarters at Washington.

More important than the details of the amended act, and by far, is the significance of the support given Senator Glass in his efforts to insure a sound banking system. It shows that, in spite of heresies and vagaries propounded by spellbinders and publicity seekers, as well as by debt evasionists, in the past two or three years, the country is still at bottom conservative where its money and credit are concerned. It followed the emergency measures of the Administration, in the belief that they were necessary at the time, but it isn't inclined to favor tinkering, experimentation and fantasy as a permanent thing, whether in the name of reform or recovery.

Anticipated.

Consideration of the banking act was suspended in financial quarters in early afternoon, when the voting began on the public utility bill. Defeat of the so-called death clause by the House on record vote, by a larger majority than that shown yesterday, gave all round satisfaction, but it was not followed by a rush of buying. The market, a bit calloused, doubtless realizes that the utility hounders are not yet through, and after all the market has discounted much of the favorable news.

Action was plentiful in stocks. Lights and shadows flitted across the trading, with a general lifting of visibility. Heavy declines in Southern Railway stock and bonds, a break in Bohn Aluminum and heaviness in Water Works, on omission of the dividend were points scored by the bears. They were matched by another boost in Radio B shares, strength in Campbell Wyant and Murray, and a broad gain, without excitement, in the public utility shares. Utility advances in leading stocks reached from 1 to 4 points, but the early rise was checked by Water Works. Utility trading made up 25 per cent of the whole.

Capital Bank Deposits Total $266,578,580

Denotes Increase of More Than $30,000,000 in Past 12 Months.

By R. Karl von Lewinski.

Deposits in all Washington banks on the last business day of June were over $30,000,000, higher than on the corresponding day a year ago, it was revealed yesterday when J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency, called for condition of all banks in the city as of that date.

Twenty-two actively operating banks reported aggregate deposits of $266,578,580. On the same date of 1934 the banks had on deposit a total of $236,159,198.

A slight recession in deposits from the last call date on March 4, when a total of $275,226,551 was reported, was laid generally to temporary withdrawals to escape the intangible tax levied on deposits as of July 1.

Drop Is Seasonal.

The drop in bank deposits from the last call is seasonal and has been expected, bank officials asserted yesterday. At the end of the fiscal year a great deal of the money is taken out of deposit temporarily and placed either in safe deposit vaults or in tax exempt securities, to be returned several weeks later.

The most reliable indication of the steady progress that is being made in Washington was cited by bankers in the year's gain. They also pointed out that the seasonal decline of $8,500,000 from the last call date was considerably lower than the drop of $9,290,000 recorded during the same time of 1934.

Yesterday's condition call affected all the national banks in the country. At the same time the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation issued a similar call for all insured State banks not members of the Federal Reserve System.

New York, July 2.—U. S. Steel Corporation is dismantling several additional plants of subsidiary companies. American Sheet & Tin Plate Co. has sold its Wellsville, Ohio, works to the United Iron & Metal Co., for dismantling. The plant was built in 1873 and had 10 hot mills for making black sheets and 16 cold stands.

It is reported the Carnegie Steel Co. is preparing to ask bids on dismantling its Newcastle, Pa., steel works.

Curb Prices Rise In Active Trading

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 2.—The curb market bounded upward in impressive fashion today under leadership of mining and utility shares. Trading was active.

A broad and persistent demand for preferred and common shares of leading holding companies was in evidence from the outset and held the spotlight throughout the session. Gains of one to two points were numerous in this group at the close, including several issues of Electric Bond & Share, American Gas and Duke Power.

Mining shares in demand at advances of a point or so included Lake Shore, Bunker Hill & Sullivan and Newmont.

Profit Taking Shades Prices In Grain Mart

Wheat Drops About One Cent as Aggressive Buying Waves.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 2.—Nervousness dominated the grain market today in the absence of bullish, aggressive buying that has characterized recent sessions, and as a result wheat prices were knocked down about a cent by profit taking.

Continued flow of black rust reports from the wheat belt, although diminished in volume, failed to spur the lagging buying power. An advance of around 7 cents during the previous three days over prices prevailing a week ago had so weakened the market's technical position that rallies were not maintained. In addition, bulls were disappointed by favorable harvesting weather Southwest, weakness in Liverpool wheat and bearish interpretation of the private crop estimates.

Wheat closed ¼@⅞ cent below the previous finish, September 87@87¼, and corn was 1⅜ lower to ⅜ higher, September 75¾@75⅞. Oats dipped ½@⅞, rye ⅞@1⅛ and barley was unchanged to 1 cent off.

Big Crops Likely to Upset Business, Survey Declares

New York, July 2.—While a larger harvest this year will be favorable insofar as the long term is concerned, it is likely to be an unsettling factor in the immediate future, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute.

In the first place, by depressing the prices of farm products before a larger supply as an offsetting factor is available for market, larger crops will tend to curtail temporarily the farmer's purchasing power and thus increase the surplus of manufactured goods.

In the second place, larger crops will have a weakening effect on the general price structure which will tend to stimulate the dumping on the market of surplus stocks of all kinds of goods which have been accumulated as the result of the rising price trend during the past two years.

In the third place, lower prices will tend to cause a temporary curtailment of industrial activity because of the difficulty in immediately adjusting labor costs to a lower price level. In the long run, however, lower prices as the result of a larger harvest will stimulate a renewal of the recovery movement, since the present price level is too high relative to the national income to permit further progress toward recovery.

Trade Buying Lifts Cotton Price $1 a Bale

Scarcity of Contracts a Factor; July Closes at 12.01.

By the Associated Press.

Business was comparatively quiet early, but prices held steady and an increased afternoon demand found the market with little cotton offering.

Song of The New Florida.

("Florida has passed a 90-day divorce law."—News item.)

Come! Florida bids you welcome,
And offers you all she has—
The coconut palms, the sunshine,
The beaches and night club jazz;
The months of unending summer,
The golfing at fair LaGorce,
The quest of the leaping sailfish—
(And maybe a swift divorce!)

From Jacksonville down the coastline
There's all that the heart desires—
The flowers, the fruits, the birdies
That sing in the leafy choirs;
We'll help you to shed your worries,
And show you the restful life—
(And, speaking of shedding, mister,
We'll help you to shed your wife!)

Oh, come where it's always summer,
Make haste where the robins sing,
Where bathing girls always gambol
And tropical pleasure cling!
Our people will make you happy
No favors will they begrudge—
(They'll take you by streamline auto
To visit a streamline judge.)

The morning on sunny beaches—
A motorboat spin at noon—
Then off to the gee-gee races
'Neath skies like a Northern June;
The dogs at the beach that evening—
Then night clubs and song and gin—
A dance in the tropic moonlight
(And p'rhaps a divorce thrown in!)

Oh, visit the sun-kissed beaches,
And eat of the sun-kissed fruit!
Develop a sun-kissed torso
Unhampered by bathing suit!
Behold all our sun-kissed wonders—
Our coconut (sun-kissed) trees—
(And don't miss our latest product
Our Sun Kissed Divorce Decrees!)

What! No Relief Check Deliveries?

Elmer Twitchell says he couldn't get down to headquarters for his weekly relief check today because his wife had one car and his daughter the other.

Well, Max Baer is so determined to win back the heavyweight fighting title that he has become a Sullivan by marriage.

"Trace Tie Between Stomach and Brain."—headline. When you start eating neckwear you certainly give the doctors a load of trouble.

Under our present tax system the black sheep of a family will soon be the boy who grew up and became a successful industrialist.

A famous tennis player has been challenged to fight a duel. This seems a little unnecessary, but we would support any plan for such a movement against golfers.

Tell me, Hartford a second-story worker? No! No!
I regret, Mrs. Bungle, that this affair has caused you so much concern, but...
Oh it's no trouble at all. I've always wanted to hear Mr. Oakdale explain something like this and....
Ah, at last. The doorbell. It's him.

Meaning that 17-year-old Martin Bonesteel will be among those present when the amateurs gather for Town Hall tonight, WRC, at 8. Martin already is a champion. In 1934 and again in 1935 he won the National High School solo contest, trombone division, while a pupil in the high school at Aurora, Ill.

When we phoned V. C. Bonesteel, Martin's father, yesterday afternoon to inquire about Martin, we learned that he probably will not pursue a career in music despite his favorable start. He's going to the University of Wisconsin this fall, but not to study trombone.

Bonesteel, sr., a member of the review committee, Federal Home Loan Bank Board, lives at 3020 Tilden street northwest. When Martin won the trombone championship two years in succession, the Town Hall invited him to audition for its amateur show. He made the grade.

Home town girls make good.

The "Three Little Words," WJSV's singing trio, go network beginning Saturday. At 3 o'clock Columbia feeds its entire chain from Washington. Looks as though the gals are going up, all right.

It's called "Heading for the Jamboree." . . . Isidor Philipp, dean of French pianists, plays an all-Mozart program, with NBC Symphony, WMAL, 9:30.

Oscar Shaw will leave "Petticoat Fever" long enough tonight to m. c. to the Broadway Varieties show with Elizabeth Lennox, WJSV, 7:30 . . . Jim Harkins, Town Hall amateur casting director, steps into Fred Allen's shoes tonight, what with Allen, Portland and their script writer all leaving for the Coast for an extended vacation . . . Mary Eastman sings Voi Che Sapete ("Marriage of Figaro"), "By the Bend of the River" and "I'm Falling in Love With Someone" in "Melody Masterpieces," WJSV, 9:30 p. m.

Our compliments go to Shannon Allen for his idea and for his production in "Judging the Stars." We watched the show in N. B. C.'s broiling studio Monday night, observed Phil Merryman's applause machine, saw the show routined to provide for script adjustments to accord with contestants selected in the first part of the program. A delightful aftermath was a spirited argument with Maestro Schramm on the latter's contention that "fast" numbers for broadcasting were practically nil. We can, at least, take one unkind advantage of Rudy Schramm and in this manner get the last word: We still think "Mr. and Mrs." is a sorry number for July, this year of our Lord, 1935.

A.B.C. Bill Compromise Is Forecast by Norton

The entire personnel of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board yesterday called upon Chairman Mary T. Norton of the House District Committee, and subsequently she announced that she expected a compromise could be reached on the differences between the Senate and House on an amendment to the A.B.C. bill.

"I do not want to be arbitrary," she said, "and the A.B.C. board members told me that it is essential that the bill pass this session.

Previously, Mrs. Norton predicted the bill probably would go over because of the differences over an amendment restricting retailers to purchasing from District wholesale dealers.
